Robert Cotton, manager of the Cleveland exchange of Fox Film Corporation, has succeeded in giving widespread exploitation. Large display spreads were placed in all the city's daily newspapers, teaser posters stationed as far as ten miles out of town, and unique lobby arrangements effected.

The theatres, having a total seating capacity of 14,000, are: Fountain, Majestic, Glenside, Milo, W. P. Orpheum, Glen, Union, Manhattan, Crown, Penn. Square, Homestead, Cozy, Southern, Lorain-Fulton, Monarch, Shaw-Hayden, Market Square, New Colonial, "Y," Arion, Vandora, Cedar, Virginia.

Breaks Record

"'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' played to the biggest crowds in the history of our house, exceeding our former high record by thirty-one per cent," writes Paul Krier, manager of the Star Theatre, Walsenburg, Colo., after playing this United Artists Corporation release. "To even have equalled a former record would have been remarkable, for business has slumped considerably. The picture pleased 100 per cent. You cannot promise too much."

Famed Chorus Beauties in "Enemies of Women"

Advices from Tipton, Iowa, last week were that more than thirty bob-sleighs were hitched around the Square one day. According to Mike Connelly, casting director for Cosmopolitan Productions, more than thirty limousines were hitched out front of the Cosmopolitan studios at Second avenue and 127th street, New York, for four days a couple of months ago.

During the filming of the Vicente Blasco Ibenez story, "Enemies of Women," now playing at the Central Theatre, New York, a hundred of the most famous beauties of Broadway were garnered for scenes depicting a Russian fete.

A couple dozen of the most constantly photographed Ziegfeld and Greenwich Village Follies girls drape themselves in gorgeous dress through a few thousand feet of fete film that promises to prove one of the many intriguing episodes in this newest film from the Cosmopolitan studios.

Eight of the dancing girls take part in an alluring dance number, arranged to stir the jaded fancy of Prince Lubimoff of the story, played by Lionel Barrymore. In this group are Maxine and Evelyn Arnold, Beatrice Keen, Mary McIntosh, Peggy Raymond, Nellie Savage, Virginia Whitehead and Dorothy Dinsmore. The dance, in spite of the beauty and lure, doesn't stir an eyelash on the bored Prince.

As varied in reason for their wanting to participate in the film as they are in type of pulchritude, while about a fourth of the number drove to the studio in machines, one of the girls riding from her home uptown, on a bicycle. It wasn't a "stunt" arrival, for the girl frequently appears at her stage door via the same method of transit. She is a candor and gorgeously indifferent to whether or not "things are being done that way."

"Eleventh Hour" Is Big Fox Production

The big box-office successes scored by "The Fast Mail," the Lincoln J. Carter melodrama on the current release program of Fox Film Corporation, in theatres throughout the United States and many foreign countries, have offered William Fox the incentive for another honest melodrama by the same playwright.

"The Eleventh Hour" is the title of the thriller now in the process of completion at the West Coast studios. Charles Jones, who was the featured player in "The Fast Mail," and Shirley Mason are the stars featured in the new photoplay, the story and scenario of which—founded on the famous Carter success of former years—was prepared by Louis Sherwin. Included in the cast are June Elvidge, Alan Hale, Edward Martindale, Richard Tucker, Walter McGrail and Frederick Kelsey. Other notable actors will be added to this list, the announcement states. Bernard J. Durning is directing the picture.

The Fox interests declare "The Eleventh Hour" will be produced on a scale heretofore unsurpassed in the making of a screen melodrama.

The story possesses the charm of a young heiress in her effort to prevent many conflicting factions from robbing her of her most valuable heritage—the secret formula of an explosive more powerful than anything heretofore discovered. Aiding her, and in the guise of an antagonist, is the chief of a United States Secret Service unit.

Included in the series of hair-raising sequences are such stunts as the destruction of an entire mountain by the explosion of the secret vial; a fight between a government hydroplane and a submarine manned by vandals; a terrific ocean storm; the sinking of a submarine; the expulsion from the sunken submarine of a torpedo containing human cargoes; the flight of the heroine in a speed boat from the pirates on the high seas; the explosion of a large factory; the fight in a lions' cage; the one hundred foot leap from a shore-line building into the ocean; the swinging of a girl by a crane over a huge cauldron of molten iron; and numerous other incidental thrills.

"The Eleventh Hour" was at one time a most popular stage production on Broadway in New York. More than a dozen road companies were playing in this country and abroad during the crest of its popularity, and "the eleventh hour" became a slang expression for the propitious moment. Release date of the special will be announced later.

Program of Specials Announced

Next season William Fox will drop the production of program pictures and release a series of specials of the highest order, including such famous stage successes as "Six Cylinder Love," "Loyalties," "The Governor's Lady" and "Hoodman Blind."

Other celebrated stage plays to be shown on the screen are "Monna Vanna," "The Shepherd King," "Cameo Kirby" and "St. Elmo." A screen version of "If Winter Comes" will be among the features. The screen rights to Channing Pollock's record-breaking hit, "The Fool," have also been secured by the Fox organization.

A director's life is not all hardship. Witness Clarence G. Badger surrounded by members of "The Monkey Ballet," one of the features of the Goldwyn picture, "Red Lights," which he is directing.

Complete Big Cast for "Brass Bottle"

Maurice Tourneur has surrounded himself with an exceptionally talented aggregation of players for his picturization of "The Brass Bottle," to be produced by M. C. Levee for First National release.

For the character of Horace Ventimore, the young architect, Tourneur has selected Harry Myers, who will portray a role similar to that he pictured in "The Connecticut Yankee." For the part of Fakrash-el-Aamash, the genii, the director has engaged Ernest Torrence. Tully Marshall as Prof. Futvoye, Clarissa Selwyn as Mrs. Futvoye, Ford Sterling as Rapkin, Aggie Herring as Mrs. Rapkin, Charlotte Marriam as Sylvia Futvoye and Ed Jobson as Samuel Wackerbath, comprise the other portrayers of the leading characters.

The building of several elaborate sets to be used in the early scenes of this production is now nearing completion at the United Studios. Actual "shooting" started last week. Scott R. Beal is acting as Mr. Tourneur's assistant on this production with Arthur Todd in charge of the cameras and Milton Menasco, head of the art direction.

Lichtman Releases for April and May

The Al Lichtman Corporation has listed the following Preferred Pictures for release during April and May: "Daughters of the Rich," a Gasnier production from Edgar Saltus' novel, and "The Girl Who Came Back," a Tom Forman production, and an adaptation of the well known stage play by Charles E. Blaney and Samuel R. Golding.

Extensive Publicity for Paramount Star

The release of Pola Negri's first American-made picture, George Fitzmaurice's Paramount production of Robert Hichens' novel, "Bella Donna," follows one of the most extensive publicity campaigns ever given any star or picture in the history of motion pictures.

Since the arrival of Miss Negri in America last September, thousands of columns of publicity have been printed in newspapers and magazines on the exotic Paramount star. The first big publicity break was in her arrival and tour across the country. Immediately afterward the New York World, through arrangements made with Charles E. McCarthy, publicity manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, began the publication of a series of ten weekly installments of Miss Negri's autobiography. This autobiography was syndicated to more than fifty newspapers throughout the country.

From then on the newspapers and magazines were full of stories on the activities of Miss Negri. It is estimated that Miss Negri's newspaper publicity alone since her arrival in this country has amounted to more than 10,000 columns.

The publicity campaign on Miss Negri, however, is not stopping with the release of "Bella Donna." It is to be kept going in many ways and through devious channels.

Starts Production of "The Talisman"

Production work on "The Talisman" has been begun at the Thomas H. Ince studios. Coming as the initial effort of the recently announced triumvirate, Associated Authors, in which Frank E. Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris join in production work for release through Allied Producers and Distributors' Corporation, a subsidiary of United Artists Corporation, the trio announce that they are planning a "special" that will outstrip other big features in lavishness of sets and finished technique.

Chester Withey is directing the forthcoming production while Wallace Beery, whose characterization of King Richard in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" has won him such a strong following, will be featured in the same character in "The Talisman."

14 Selznick Revivals Slated for Release

Following a comprehensive and analytical survey of the market which included a canvass of many representative exhibitors throughout the country, General Manager John S. Woody has announced that Selznick Pictures Corporation will schedule for immediate release revivals of fourteen of the most popular productions originally released by that organization several years ago.

All of these productions have been carefully selected; judgment being based largely on their past success, the present popularity of the stars and principal players, and many other individual factors which go to make real box-office attractions.

Browning to Direct "The Day of Faith"

Tod Browning's first picture for Goldwyn, which recently placed him under a long term contract to direct big features, will be "The Day of Faith," the new novel by Arthur Somers Roche, the screen rights to which have just been purchased by Goldwyn. It is the intention of the producing firm to make one of its biggest productions out of this novel. It was this story which so vividly impressed Governor McRae of Arkansas that he proclaimed a "day of faith" throughout that state immediately after having read the book.

June Mathis, Goldwyn's Editorial Director, will adapt the novel for the motion picture screen.

The story was a serial in Collier's Weekly in 1921 and was later published in book form by Little, Brown & Co., and has enjoyed a big sale, it is said.

Going to Alaska to Film Scenes

Arthur H. Sawyer, supervising director of S-L specials produced for Metro, has announced that an entire company of players will be taken to Alaska for the purpose of filming certain scenes in the forthcoming Sawyer-Lubin special, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Fox Releases for April 8 Week

Fox Film Corporation announces three releases for the week of April 8th, two of which are feature productions and the other a Sunshine Comedy.

"The Madness of Youth" is the title of the John Gilbert picture which is scheduled for release on April 8th. Jerome Storm, director of many film successes, handled the story, which comes from the gifted pen of George F. Worts, the magazine writer. Billie Dove, once a star in her own right, is cast in the role of the feminine lead, and the rest of the cast includes Dorothy Manners, Donald Hatswell, George K. Arthur, Wilton Taylor, Ruth Boyd and Luke Lucas.

Shirley Mason will be seen in "Lovebound," previously announced under the working title, "Inside the Door," and "Balance Due," released April 15th. The story was written by George Scarborough and adapted by Josephine Quirk and Jules Furthman. Henry Otto directed. Albert Roscoe, star of many Broadway stage productions, will support the fascinating Fox actress.

"The Three Gun Man" will be the Sunshine Comedy for the week.

Preacher Praises Arliss Picture

The Rev. Frederic H. von der Sump of the Trinitarian Congregational Church, New Bedford, Mass., says that for beauty and as representation of the best in motion picture production the George Arliss feature, "The Man Who Played God," a United Artists release, easily ranks as one of the three best films he has used in his church service work in the last four years.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Board of Review Confers Unique Honor on Series of Bruce Films

For what is said to be the first time, the National Board of Review has indorsed a series of pictures as a series, in its Exceptional Photoplays Bulletin. These pictures are the three Robert C. Bruce single reel Wilderness Tales, distributed by Educational: "By Lantern Light," "Moonblind" and "Jenkins and the Mutt."

Although three previous Educational releases were reviewed as special pictures, "And Women Must Weep" and "The One Man Reunion," which were Bruce pictures, also "The Enchanted City" by Warren A. Newcombe, they were considered individually.

"After all the gaudy and pretentious feature productions have gone by," says Exceptional Photoplays, "these three little films will remain vivid in the minds of those who have seen them. They are nearer to art, truer to beauty, and more imaginative about life. And if Mr. Bruce is as successful in working out the rest of the series as he has been in producing these, he will have to his credit an achievement that is solid and convincing."

The review continues:

"In a new series of dramanature pictures, distributed by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., Robert C. Bruce has worked near to a much more effective method of combining nature and entertainment for the screen than we have been used to seeing. Indeed, those pictures which have so far been produced in the series are pure entertainment with a dramatic context which is often more suggestive of struggle values than most of the so-called photodramas. No exhibitor need feel that any part of his audience will walk out on these little pictures on the score of their being 'scenics' or 'educationals.'

"Mr. Bruce's pictures are real short stories—much the best that of their kind so far. They are short stories in the true sense, utilizing a single incident and concluding with a fine sense of selection everything that is irrelevant to that incident, while at the same time using imagination to grasp the right details so as to throw the greatest possible illumination on the point of the narrative. This treatment is always compact, concerned with the essentials; but no feeling results that the story has been stilted so as to make it fit into a thousand feet; a complete and rounded effect is generally achieved."

Six Girl Comedies

Stern Brothers have signed the entire Gorham Follies company, headed by Doris Eaton, to make a series of six Century Comedies to be directed by Archie Mayo, with Miss Eaton starring and Jack Coope playing opposite. The deal includes twenty-five players with wardrobes and properties estimated at $50,000. The Gorham Follies, produced by J. A. Gorham, who directed some of the Ziegfeld shows, has played some of the big stage circuits and large hotels like the Palace and Ambassador. It is promised that the new series will be superlative miniature girl shows de luxe. Miss Eaton was formerly one of the principals in the Ziegfeld Follies.

Shows Chaplin

Tri-Stone announces the release of the reconstructed version of "Dough and Dynamite," starring Charlie Chaplin. This two-reeler was given a trade showing recently and is said to have evoked considerable praise. The picture was re-titled by Syd Chaplin. Tony Sarg has prepared a fine poster, and other snappy lobby display and billboard material is furnished on this picture.

Heavily Booked

Edward O. Brooks, serial sales manager for Pathe, who has returned from a three months' sales trip to Pacific Coast territory, reports that heavy advance bookings on the new Ruth Roland serial, "Haunted Valley," fully bear out the spirit of optimism reflected in his recent report on conditions. This serial will follow Pearl White in "Plunder" on the Pathe program.

Unique Hodkinson Tie-up with Evening Mail on "Mystery Box"

What is considered by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as one of the biggest exploitation tie-ups for a short subject is the arrangement inaugurated by the New York Evening Mail on "The Mystery Box," produced by J. R. Bray. This includes a campaign which was inaugurated by a full-page story in the March 31 issue of the Mail explaining the production and accompanied by a layout of stills.

The object is to obtain the best description of a person's experience with radio, which will, if possible, be used as a basis for a new picture to be produced by Bray. It is felt that, backed by an extensive campaign as followed by the Evening Mail, "The Mystery Box" will receive unusual exploitation for a short subject, as the campaign will include the listing of all theatres in the territory covered by that paper, which have booked the picture.

The newspaper will also print posters to be used on its wagons and a special window card for merchants, with blank space for imprint of the local theatre. In addition, the Mail is distributing handbills, throwaways and other mediums of advertising to all schools in its territory, and a trailer has been added to the film calling attention to this campaign.

Hodkinson reports that widespread interest has been aroused by this film. It has an extended run in St. Louis as a result of a tie-up engineered by C. D. Hill with the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. According to Mr. Hill, of the Hodkinson St. Louis office, this is the first time a single reel subject has been booked for four weeks by four of St. Louis' big first run houses. They are the Missouri, Columbia, Delmar and Congress.

During the four weeks' run in St. Louis it is stated that the Post-Dispatch ran several pages of publicity matter. Radio merchant also took advantage of the showing, resulting in exceptional cooperative advertising and exploitation. As a result, it is reported that "The Mystery Box" in St. Louis broke all records wherever shown.

Universal Has New Series Dealing with Horse Racing

Spurred by the success of "The Leather Pushers" series of prize fight stories, Universal will produce a new series of two-reelers dealing with horse racing, to be known as "The Information Kid" series. They will be adapted from Gerald Beaumont's "Rider Up" stories published in the Red Book and also in book form.

There will be eight two-reelers, and Mr. Beaumont has been at Universal City helping in preparing the scenarios. The series will be directed by Nat Ross, who directed several Hoot Gibson features. This series will be released as Universal-Jewels and it is planned to have them ready early in the summer during the height of the racing season, so that exhibitors will be afforded opportunity for tie-ups.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, announces that the filming of this series is in line with his conviction that high grade short subjects are in ever increasing demand with the public and that they will be given the same care in production as super-features.

It is expected that the new series will duplicate the success of the "Leather Pushers."

Our Gang Film at Capitol Gets Big Newspaper Praise

Freckled Mickey Daniels and the other juvenile screen stars in the Hal Roach two-reel Our Gang Comedies made themselves doubly amusing to Capitol Theatre, New York, audiences recently in "The Big Show." In addition to the stunts of boyhood, it includes "take-offs" on several of the screen's celebrated figures.

Mickey Daniels thus pays his respects to Douglas Fairbanks, Harold Lloyd and Bill Hart are "interpreted" by other members of the cast, while little Mary Kornman impersonates Mary Pickford.

New York newspaper reviewers paid their compliments to this Capitol Theatre occasion after the following fashion:

Tribune—"These kid comedies, sponsored by Hal Roach, are among the real joys of the screen."

Morning Telegraph—"It would be well worth anyone's time to go this week to the Capitol to see 'The Big Show.' This comedy has the rare virtue of not having one dull moment."

Times—"'The Big Show' is full of fun, a half-hour's delight for young and old."

Evening Telegram—"'The Big Show' is an original and diverting short reel."

Evening Globe—"But Hal Roach and his 'Rascals' are on the bill and do much to make up for the dull patches that one has to sit through in the feature."

Pearl White and Leo Maloney Head Pathe List for April 15

Suspense and terror predominate in the twelfth episode of "Plunder," released April 15 in a Pathe program. Pearl White, the heroine, is seen plunged into an ingenious peril, from which there seems to be no escape.

This program contains also a two-reel Western of the Range Rider Series, "When Fighting's Necessary," the stirring and sympathetic action of which rises out of the hero's determination to prove to the Eastern "school ma'am," whom he loves, that she has still much to learn about the West.

In the Hal Roach one-reel comedy, "Good Riddance," with Paul Parrott, action ensues upon the hero's girl's ultimatum that he must get rid of his dog.

The Aesop's Film Fable is "One Hard Pull." It deals with all sorts of tooth-pulling, with Farmer Al Falfa the chief victim.

In its Popular Science Series, Pathe Review No. 15 makes demonstrations of "Glacial Age Instincts." A minnow is frozen into the heart of a cake of ice. It is frozen solid, yet when the ice is thawed the fish came out as lively as ever.

Educational's April List Includes Four Two-Reelers

Educational's program for April consists of twenty-two reels and includes two Mermaid Comedies supervised by Jack White, "Kick Out" and "Cold Chills," and two Christies, "Green as Grass" and "Take Your Choice." The remainder of the program consists of three Cameo Comedies, "Family Troubles," with Eddie Barry, and Jimmie Adams in "The Dude" and "Traffic"; a Bruce Wilderness Tale, "Jenkins and the Mutt"; two cartoon subjects, "The Movie Dare Devil," an Earl Hurd release and the Lyman Howe Hodge Podge, "Speed Demons."

"Kick Out" is a lion comedy featuring Lige Conley, while "Cold Chills" shows Louise Fazenda as a Swedish maid. "Green as Grass" is Jimmie Adams' first starring vehicle with Christie, while "Take Your Choice" is a living room farce featuring Bobby Vernon "Family Troubles" is a comedy of a flivver, "The Dude" shows Jimmie Adams as a farm hand and "Traffic" presents him as a commuter.

Hodkinson First Runs

"Colonel Heeza Liar and the Burglar" has begun a two weeks' showing at the Strand, New York, and "The Mystery Box" is enjoying a three weeks' run at the Symphony in Los Angeles, being booked for one week and held over for two more. Both of these films are distributed by Hodkinson, who reports they follow many previous showings of Hodkinson short subjects in leading theatres. In addition, the Olympic in Pittsburgh has signed for a first run showing on all eleven of the All Star Comedies featuring Charles Murray.

Territory Sale

Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation reports the sale of rights for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Standard Film Attractions of Philadelphia, on a series of eighteen single-reel subjects in a series known as "Tense Moments from Famous Plays and Great Authors."

"When Fighting's Necessary"

(Pathe—Drama—Two Reels)

Characteristic of the Leo Maloney series of two-reel Westerns distributed by Pathe, this release is strong with human interest and crammed with action. The human interest element is more than usually strong and there is an unusual twist in the situation where the hero refuses to fight for a trivial matter, incurs the scorn of the Eastern girl, but wins back her regard when he proves a hero when fighting's necessary. Though somewhat far-fetched, the situation where he captures a gang of crooks single handed is cleverly done and holds the interest. It ranks well with the remainder of the series, which means that it is high in entertainment value for those who like Westerns.

C. S. S.

"Col. Heeza Liar and the Burglar"

(Hodkinson—Cartoon—One Reel)

Action is the keynote of this combination cartoon and photographed single-reeler produced by Bray and distributed by Hodkinson. The Colonel certainly meets with some blood-curdling adventures when he delves into the pages of a magazine and has an experience with the burglar mentioned in the story. The idea is cleverly executed and the film affords good entertainment. It is one of the best of the Heeza Liar series. C. S. S.

"The Dude"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

This is a good number for the average program. It has many laughs and moves along brightly with Jimmie Adams and Virginia Vance in rural scenes. A barn dance is conducted with considerable amusement, including a clever straw-man dance.—M. K.

"Screen Snapshots No. 23"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

As usual, there is quite an array of screen celebrities in this issue of Screen Snapshots, which should delight the fans who like to see them as they are in the studio and in their homes. Among those pictured are Hugo Ballin, George Walsh, Claire Windsor, Patsy Ruth Miller, Helen Ferguson, Eleanor Boardman, Theodore Roberts and his wife, Lew Cody, Bert Lytell and Gaston Glass.—C. S. S.

"Take Your Choice"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Although using a familiar idea, with this Christie comedy with Bobbie Vernon is well done and furnishes acceptable entertainment for the majority. Bobbie Vernon has the kind of part in which he excels. He gets into strenuous complications when his butler mails four letters of proposal which Bobby had discarded after writing. The situation of too many fiancees is a medium for lively action and a punch at the close.—M. K.

"The Salesman"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Rube comedy holds the interest in the first part of this which is laid in a country grocery store where Al St. John is installed as clerk. One of the consumer's capacity for dried prunes provides a riot of slapstick. The rest concerns the robbery of the clerk who leaves to deposit the receipts. It is all up to the star's usual standard and produces in several instances hilarious effects. —M. K.

"Peanuts"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

One of the series of single-reel comedies distributed by Universal, starring Lewis Sargent in the role of a telegraph messenger boy. The story interest is slight, but there is considerable action and humor. It revolves around the attempt of Sargent to perfect an invention for shelling peanuts. He uses so much gas he is accused by revenue officers of having a still. It will appeal more especially to children and Sargent fans. As a whole, it is weaker than the majority of this series.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 15"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

A very interesting issue of Pathe Review is this one. A particularly instructive section shows how a fish can be frozen in a cake of ice and, while apparently dead, will revive when the ice is melted. This enables them to stay in the ice all winter when the streams are frozen. Among the other interesting sections is one of a real cubist city in the Soudan, Africa, which is not new, but dates back to 850 B. C., showing that "cubistic" ideas are not ultra-modern as generally thought.

C. S. S.

"The Outlaw and the Lady"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is a particularly spirited number of the Harry Carey series of reissues presented by Universal, which have been cut down from three reels to two reels. The star in this picture appears as an outlaw who after kidnapping a mine owner's daughter for revenge, gains her confidence, trusts her with his life when he is attacked by a posse and is repaid by her when through a ruse she accomplishes his chance for escape. There is plenty of action and those to whom this series appeals will be satisfied.—C. S. S.

"Good Riddance"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

This is one of the very best of the series of single-reel comedies distributed by Pathe, starring Paul Parrott. In addition to several humorous situations, there is considerable cleverness shown and an unusual amount of sympathy and human interest developed by the unsuccessful attempts of Parrott to get rid of his faithful dog that has incurred the displeasure of his best girl. A very clever dog has been used and this animal comes very near grabbing the limelight away from the star. Almost any audience will enjoy this picture.

C. S. S.

"One Hard Pull"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

While some very sensitively inclined may object to this Pathe cartoon comedy as hitting too close to home, dealing as it does with a very common and very painful subject — toothache — nevertheless Cartoonist Terry has succeeded in getting a lot of amusement out of Farmer Al Falfa's predicament and the attempt of the cat to cure it. It is handled in his usual clever manner and for the majority will afford good entertainment. C. S. S.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Rivoli, Baltimore

C. F. Reese, Baltimore, Md., has the following to say:

While I would like to address you as brother, I cannot, as I have no connection with the profession of projecting moving pictures.

Through a relative who owns an interest in one of the smaller theatres I met its projectionist, Mr. Bayne. He was a fine fellow and from him I learned much concerning projection. I now project pictures for my church, using two portable projectors. But this is somewhat beside the real purpose of my letter.

Mr. Bayne is now projectionist at the Rivoli Theatre, which is one of the best in Baltimore. I have read and studied the projection department and have learned much therefrom. I compared things at the Rivoli with your special article, issue February 10, and find the two to fit together very well. I wish you might sometime inspect this theatre. Here are some of the things the Rivoli management has done, looking toward perfection.

Two projectionists are employed, at considerable advance over the union scale, aside from the Chief Projectionist.

Using a hand rewind, these men inspect the films carefully once each day. They have speed guages and project at one speed week in and week out. They have a fine, large, well illuminated projection room, with three Powers projectors, as well as many other advantages.

In closing I may remark that Baltimore theatres need a visit from a man like you, except for a few like the Rivoli.

You are doing a fine work for the profession. Keep it up.

Not Good Practice

I am giving this letter space for several reasons, one of which is that I want to call attention to an amusing thing in connection with friend Reese's remarks. He names certain things as evidence of progressiveness and up-to-date procedure in the Rivoli, among them two items which do not represent good practice. He says that projection speed is the same week in and week out.

Now I do not criticize Mr. Reese for calling that enlightened procedure, because he does not claim to be a projectionist.

To get 100 per cent projection, which means 100 per cent box office value, it is necessary that the projectionist change speed on different scenes of any production in which there is change of camera speed.

How will he, or how can he know what the camera speed was, you ask.

Well, that is exactly one of the reasons that high class skill in the reading of action is necessary in a projection room. The real projectionist must be a STUDENT OF ACTION. He is not, and the exhibitor knows he is not, hence very properly refuses to leave INTERPRETATION of the photoplay to the projectionist, which means that both the industry and the box offices must and do suffer.

Not Hot Air

Oh, no, this is NOT bull, nor is it hot air. Some day the industry will awaken to the fact that it is even and exact TRUTH, and that failure to recognize that fact has already cost the industry hundreds of millions of dollars.

This much may be said concerning the "pound-'em-through-at-one-speed" stunt: it is much better than allowing an orchestra leader to jack projection speed up or lower it at his own sweet will; also decidedly better than "rushing" projection when there are crowds.

Another amusing thing is the "well illuminated projection room." Why, my dear Mr. Reese, that is precisely what is NOT wanted, especially if the projection distance be long or the observation ports be small, or both.

When I projected pictures I insisted on walls and ceiling being dead (non-gloss) BLACK. I allowed no light in the room other than the arc of the working projector, while a picture was being projected.

This was so that I might have the clearest, sharpest possible view of the screen at all times. You know it is impossible to look out of a well lighted room through an opening in its wall and see a screen quite some distance away as clearly as you could see it were the room you look from dark.

I do not now insist that the walls be black (though from the optical viewpoint that is perfectly correct), but that they be a dark, light-absorbing color, such as dark chocolate or dark green. These colors serve very well and are less depressing than black.

Now don't get me wrong. I have no doubt but that the Rivoli has an excellent and well appointed projection plant, as such things go. Their encouragement of the men by paying above the union minimum scale (for a union scale is merely a MINIMUM to be paid the poorest men in the local) is fine.

Its one-speed projection is far in advance of what is all too often found, but it nevertheless is not perfection. This whole subject will be found fully explained, pages 213 to 218, inclusive, in the Bluebook—Fourtn Edition of Handbook.

I shall be delighted to inspect the Rivoli when in Baltimore and am sure that I will find much to commend.

Valuable Data

Recently I requested the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company, the Kollmorgen Optical Company and the Gundlach--Manhattan Optical Company to prepare tables or charts for me, showing the free diameter of rear combination of the various projection lenses, and the WORKING DISTANCE WHEN PROJECTING AT 100 FEET.

Each company put their experts on the job and compiled the data herewith submitted. CUT THIS OUT AND FRAME IT. It is of great value.

The working distance at 100 feet will serve for all projection distance which the lens may properly be used for, since within the economic range of the lens the working distance will vary but little. This will not, of course, hold good if you try to use the lens for a condition for which it is unsuited.

The tables may be used thus. You have a condition which requires a lens of a certain equivalent focus. You wish to order a lens suited to your conditions. You have a certain crater diameter, hence will be able to calculate the exact diameter of your light beam at any distance from the aperture.

Looking at the lenses of required E. F. you can see at a glance whether any or all of them will cover the light beam at the working distance given for that E. F. lens. I regard this data as filling a long felt want. It should be a great convenience to YOU, as well as to me.

New Lens Chart

These tables will form a part of the new lens chart we will have ready for distribution presently. It will be most complete.

It not only takes care of all amperages with the ordinary arc, but also with the high intensity. It not only tells you what you ought to have, but also what it is best to do with what you already have if needed new optical equipment cannot be procured.

It looks to me like about the last word in lens charts. I would strongly advise you all to get one, and get it just as soon as you can.

TAKE NOTICE. In accompanying tables, or charts, the measurements are given both in inches and millimeters. Take the Bausch and Lomb table, for instance. Under 3 inch E. F. the F. A. (Free Aperture) is given as 30.1 mm. or 1.187 inches. The W. D. (Working Distance) as 45.4 mm. or 1.787 inches.

F. A. is free aperture of projection lens.

W. D. is working distance at 100 feet projection distance.

Educational Lecture

L. A. Bertschi, Fort Wayne, Indiana, writes, as have several others, asking information as to a lecture presumably now being given by one Earl J. Dennison to the Paramount exchanges.

This department has not been advised as to the nature of Mr. Dennison's lecture, hence is unable to say exactly what its value may or may not be. I note, however, that Dennison is credited with saying that seventy-five per cent of all film damage is due to poor splicing, and with this I shall take decided issue.

That poorly made splices are responsible for much damage in the form of cutouts and sprocket hole indentations no one can or will question, but there are those of us who will very decidedly question any statement, by Mr. Dennison or any one else, that splice damage amounts to anything like seventy-five per cent of the total. Personally I would place it at perhaps fifteen to twenty-five per cent of the total.

What is the other seventy-five or eighty-five per cent, do you ask? Well, there are many causes, but the four big elements are (A) Rapid rewinding with rewinder elements which are out of line; (B) Too heavy projector gate tension; (C) Too heavy projector take-up tension, and (D) "Pulling down" while rewinding.

Of these the projector gate tension is by far the greatest evil, because it strains every sprocket hole in the film, and strains the working edge thereof, upon which we must depend for steadiness in the picture. If too heavy (and it often is) it will even start cracks from the corners of the sprocket holes.

Distortion

A. P. Peck, Radio Editor Science and Invention, New York City, writes:

My Dear Mr. Richardson: Perhaps I have not the right to address you on a question such as I shall ask, but always having been interested in projection, I take the liberty.

In a certain motion picture house the screen is slanted—does not stand perpendicular. The projectors are probably twenty feet higher than the stage. The question is: Is this slant of the screen necessary?

It seems to me this is irregular and certainly does detract from the projection. The pictures do not frame up square with the screen. This is particularly noticeable when a sub title with a square border is shown, as the border by no means squares up with the screen. Would like to know if there is a reason for this slant, and if it is necessary.

The slant is and is not necessary. When a lens is above the center of the screen it is, as you will readily see, a greater distance from the lens to the bottom of the screen than to the top. Lenses are made, as you doubtless know, to focus at a given distance, and since it is further to one point of the screen than to another, under this condition there will be an out-of-focus effect, either at the top or bottom of the screen.

This may be overcome in three ways, Viz: (A) by tilting the screen until both top and bottom are equi-distance from it; (B) by reducing the lens diameter, which has the effect of increasing its "depth of focus," but greatly reduces the light; (C) by placing the lens level with the center of the screen, or nearly so.

The theatre you have in mind has pulled the old stunt of placing its projection room in an impossible place—impossible from the standpoint of good work on the screen.

How Four More Picture Theatres Cater to Their Waiting Patrons

THE articles illustrating and describing how the Twin Capitol, Union Hill, N. J.; Fox Theatre, Aurora, Ill., and Loew's Palace of Washington, D. C., care for the comfort of patrons not actually viewing the screen, and which appeared in our last two issues, evidently stirred managers of other houses to tell of what they were doing along this line.

This week we have with us Moore's Rialto and Crandall's Metropolitan, both of Washington, D. C., also Loew's Park and the Stillman, two Cleveland theatres.

Unfortunately for our readers the first-mentioned pair of houses modestly omitted to supply photos of their rest rooms and promenades. But the Cleveland theatres came across with illustrations, which we are glad to show.

To any exhibitor or house manager who believes that his house possesses something as good or better than the rest rooms, lobbies or promenades already described we will be glad to give the floor if he will kick in with description and photos of those portions of his theatre.

Moore's Rialto

Moore's Rialto Theatre, of Washington, D. C., noted for the beauty of its architecture and the many conveniences installed for the comfort of its patrons, points with pride to the comfort and rest rooms provided for both men and women.

The women, in this connection, are especially fortunate. Their rest room, remodeled during the past season, being large and airy, twenty-four feet long by twenty feet wide, approached by a wide stairway from the lavatory and set apart from same. The side walls and great high ceilings are finished in light blue and tan, the floor being of hardwood and covered with luxurious rugs.

Large mirrors panel the walls on two sides. The furnishings are especially notable, ivory and gold being the predominating note. Chaise lounges, long settees and chair coverings all being of blue tapestry silk. A large vanity table completely equipped occupies one corner of the room. There are also two private telephone booths finished to conform with the rest of the fittings.

Marble and Tile Lavatory

The lavatory proper is finished in marble, white tile and nickel. A notable feature of this room is a marble drinking fountain supplying filtered drinking water cooled by being passed through iced coils.

That the feminine patrons of the Rialto appreciate the many appurtenances for their comfort installed by the management, and the spotless cleanliness that prevails, is testified to by many complimentary letters received regarding same. The final touch of comfort being supplied by the matron, an old Southern "mammy," to whom everyone is "chile" and who is known by name to thousands of Washington's fair ones.

The boys who buy the tickets have not been overlooked by any means, however, their rooms being the last word in manly comfort. The smoking room, finished in white tile, with dark blue side walls and ceiling, being equipped with deep overstuffed leather-covered couches and chairs, smoking stands, telephones and a drinking fountain similar to that in the ladies' room.

The lavatory is marble and white tile throughout, with every convenience possible to comfort, a porter always being in attendance.

Crandall's Metropolitan

The large promenade at Crandall's Metropolitan, Washington, D. C., represents that which is artistic, cozy and attractive. It is marked by pleasing soft-lighting effects. The furniture and fixtures generally are in gray and gold combinations. The four large paneled mirrors on either side of the promenade are framed in black and gold. In the center is an open well through which is obtained a view to the main auditorium on the floor below. Above the well is an electrically illuminated dome with changeable colors.

Additional lighting is obtained from sixteen two-lamp candelabra and from two tall standing lamps which fit in alcoves at one end of the promenade. The candelabra are placed on the massive marble pilasters. There are many comfortable chairs and settees for the convenience of patrons of this house and on a large table is a basket of artificial flowers, in the center of each of which is an electric light.

Matron Always on Duty

A matron is on duty at this house at all times to look after the women patrons. The women's private retiring room is finely equipped with writing desks, dressing tables and small chairs, all of the French furniture type. The men's room is fitted up in club style with large, comfortable, heavily stuffed leather chairs. A table and smoking stands are also included in the equipment.

Entrance to the mezzanine floor and the loge boxes is off this promenade and when the house is crowded, with only standing room available between shows, the promenade is used as the waiting space for seats in the mezzanine.

At times several hundred people crowd into the promenade awaiting their turn for seats.

Loew's Park Theatre

Loew's Park Theatre, situated in the heart of the East End of Cleveland, Euclid avenue and East 105th street, is an example of the new manner in which architects are handling the question of women's rest rooms. This house has two such rooms, one on the main floor and another above it on the mezzanine floor. They are "twin rooms," so to speak.

These rooms are not so large as rooms in some of the older theatres in Cleveland, the architects claiming that women do not spend much time in them since the advent of elaborate mezzanine foyers and lounging places.

The Park rooms are approximately ten feet by twelve feet, with deep red floor carpets. The chairs and window curtains are of ecru. Each has a fireplace, and an oblong table in the center, on which repose flowers.

Candlesticks adorn the mantlepieces and there is an odd shaped mirror between them. The windows are false, with hand-decorated curtains. The lighting is furnished by two chandeliers, set high. The candlesticks are wired and have frosted globes. The lavatories adjoin the rooms.

The Stillman Theatre

One of the largest and more spacious ladies' rest rooms in Cleveland is that of the Stillman Theatre.

This has the appearance of a living room in a home and is a very popular place. It is located just a few feet from the ticket-taker and many women go there immediately to await the arrival of friends with whom they have appointments.

The room is covered with a green and white carpet and has a davenport and settee, besides several reclining chairs. These are upholstered in green. There are also two writing desks and waste paper baskets. Two good-sized mirrors are on the walls, opposite each other, and there are two floor lamps, besides the wall lamps, for illuminating purposes.

Palms mounted on Oriental stools help to enliven the appearance of the room, from which there are two doors, one leading to the lavatory and another leading to a check room.

To Establish Credit Ratings on Houses

April 3, 1923.

Moving Picture World,
516 5th Avenue, N. Y. C.

Gentlemen:

Will you kindly insert this news item in your paper in the next issue:

The Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America, comprising nearly all Supply Dealers in Greater New York, have, at the urgent solicitations of prominent Theatre Owners, engaged Hoy Reporting Service to establish a credit rating for all Motion Picture Theatres in the States of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

Mr. Hoy of the Hoy Reporting Service was asked what plan his Agency would adopt in arriving at a basis of credit. He outlined the following interesting method:

All Theatres would be given in the beginning credit for one month's purchases. Theatres not paying on or before the 10th of succeeding month, will, by this neglect, be placed on a cash basis until their credit is re-established. Mr. Hoy pointed out the urgent necessity of monthly settlements for his clients, due to the enormous outstandings at present, most of which are many months past due.

Mr. Hoy's ten (10) years' credit experience in dealing with Theatres finds him very confident that all Theatre Owners will welcome the first opportunity presented to prove they are worthy of credit consideration.

A movement is now on to have this same Agency establish offices in other Centers through the country.

Very truly yours,
MOTION PICTURE EQUIPMENT DEALERS OF AMERICA.

When You Build the New Theater

you will want equipment that is of the highest quality and that represents the very latest and best in projection practice.

G-E Motor Generator Compensarcs are a lasting asset to any theater and are performing dependably in hundreds of the finest theaters from coast to coast.

The principal elements of such equipment are:

1. A motor generator connected to any supply voltage, either alternating or direct current, and delivering direct current to the projection lamps at the proper current and voltage.

2. Motor starting device which starts the motor generator and automatically shuts it off when lamps are extinguished.

3. Control panel with ammeter for reading current and field rheostat by which the current at the arc can be increased or decreased.

4. Two short circuiting switches mounted on the projector pedestals to enable the operator conveniently to shift from one lamp to the other, without interruption between reels.

Emergency equipment: It is also advisable to use A. C. Compensarcs (5) connected to the lighting circuit for use in case of failure of the power circuit to which the motor generator is connected.

With such equipment an exhibitor is assured of the best possible quality of light for his pictures. Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable.

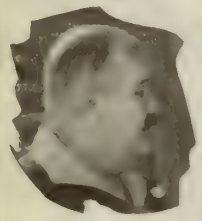
BUSTER KEATON'S ELECTRIC HOUSE ROLLICKING SATIRE

By P. W. GALLICO.

Title of picture, "THE ELECTRIC HOUSE."
Written and directed by BUSTER KEATON and EDDIE CLINE.
Featuring BUSTER KEATON.
Released by ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL.
Presented at the RIVOLI THEATRE.

The funniest thing in Buster Keaton's newest picture, "The Electric House," occurs in the opening. Buster and a lot of other people are graduating from a correspondence school, and the graduation exercises are held in the post office. The senior class is there in cap and gown, with all the admiring relatives. Diplomas are served out by the letter carrier. We thought the idea rich.



Keaton Junior

For the rest the picture is more a comedy of mechanical surprises. We liked it enormously, because that kind of thing amuses us. We like to see dinner brought in from the kitchen by an electric train, we enjoy an electric pool table that delivers the balls to the proper racks as soon as they are pocketed and then stacks them automatically for a new game.

The possibilities of mechanical bathtubs, swimming pools, staircases, etc., are unlimited and the serious Buster misses few of them.

There is only a little satire in this picture, and that is directed at the correspondence school. Buster lets the gag man work in this comedy.

Buster, graduating from a correspondence school as a certified botanist, exchanges diplomas with an electrical engineer during an argument. To please the girl he adores (Virginia Fox) he agrees to modernize her father's house while they are away on a vacation. Father, by the way, is played by "Pop" Keaton, Buster's father.

A crossed wire crosses Virginia Fox. The Keatons register discretion.

Using his botanical knowledge freely, Buster wires the house. Life becomes quite automatic. Everything is done by pushing buttons. We have always wanted a house like that, therefore this pleased us.

However, trouble begins when the original owner of the engineering diploma arrives, seeking vengeance. He gets it by crossing all the wires. The stairs operate at the wrong moment, the mechanical bathtub gives all hands a few embarrassing seconds and even the swimming pool defeats Buster's efforts to make an end of himself, but does help him to make an end to an amusing picture.

Hammering Length

Of Features—Northwest Exhibitors Give Ready Response to Idea, Sponsored by J. F. Cubberly

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis—It is reported here that J. F. Cubberly of the F. & R. Exchange has asked every exhibitor in this section to write to the home office, trade papers and the Hays organization in an effort to check the tiresome length of features. It is said that within the past week that at least 100 letters have gone in from this territory and that letters written in the language of the exhibitor sent to the home offices as well as the trade papers should make the producers and distributors understand what the exhibitor really wants.

More and more of the exhibitors are becoming sold on short subjects and where their feature is not too long they are only too glad to book in the excellent short subjects the market now affords.

Audiences are yelling for less footage and more action!

The public wants more picture in less time!

Too much padding—too many feet of meaningless film to create "specials!"

The Editor's Views

FILM men have grown so accustomed to the double feature evil in New England that little concern is aroused over the news that in some sections the situation has achieved "triple feature" proportions.

The old story of the endless chain of competition is being repeated. Few of the exhibitors concerned fail to realize the poor showmanship involved, BUT —"the other fellow" is leading the procession so there is nothing to do but follow.

Placing the quantity appeal above that of quality can lead to no good end.

A public fed to suffocation on bills running from fifteen to twenty reels will never render real appreciation to that which is good.

It is never too late to learn.

For the interest of distributors, exhibitors and public it behooves someone to take the first step towards a round table conference of New England exhibitors.

A frank and open discussion might break the endless chain and bring competition back to the basis of quality and showmanship.

FROM the exhibitor organization of Michigan has come forth a concrete and constructive plan for the financing of the national theatre owners' body.

In some respects the proposition is an enlargement to national proportions of the idea that started the successful operations of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in New York City.

The Michigan proposal calls for initial financing by fees of one hundred dollars each from a thousand exhibitors, as a result of which experienced organizers and capable field executives could be maintained throughout the country.

The plan merits every consideration.

It is business-like, and in addition to holding forth the promise of a solid organization, it serves to remove many of the dangers and temptations of circus financing by means of expositions and such side show interests.

If exhibitors do not want organization sufficiently to be willing to pay for it—their complaints sound hollow.

Sound financing, and the employment of capable workers on a basis allowing them to devote all their time to exhibitor interests—those are fine planks for a convention platform.

WE are sorry that we were not able to attend the exhibitor convention in Minneapolis this past week. President Steffes held out a tempting invitation when he wrote:

"There will be no exposition held in conjunction with the convention. We feel satisfied the exhibitors are coming in to try to effect some plan whereby they can continue to stay in business. We believe they are more interested in discussions of concrete plans than they are in exhibits.

"The three days will be given up entirely to business sessions with no entertainment provided whatever with the exception of the last evening at which time a banquet and ball will be held at the West Hotel."

There is a business-like ring to that.

Coupled with the Michigan proposal it holds out bright promise of the trend of thought on the part of the exhibitor leaders.

All of these signs point to the fact that aside from the scramble of the candidates, the national convention in Chicago in May is going to be the scene of very intelligent efforts towards real accomplishment.

We hope so. In this business the "after-convention" taste has not always been a most pleasant one.

Opinions Differed

Divergent Views Show the Fallacy of Censorship

"Bella Donna," Pola Negri's first American made motion picture, will be allowed to run at the Queen Theatre, Houston, Texas, after heavy slashes have been made in the film, by order of the City Council.

The difference of opinion displayed by several censor officials, the Mayor of Houston and newspaper men and others who viewed the picture are interesting. Briefly, here's what happened:

The City Censor Board barred the picture.

Manager C. A. McFarland of the Queen Theatre appealed to the City Council. At a private showing the Mayor and City Commissioners and about 100 society folk invited by the theatre management saw the picture, and about a score of them had nothing but praise for it.

Two of the commissioners thought it would be all right if certain long scenes in Baroudi's tent were cut out. One commissioner wanted only a brief elimination.

Mayor Holcombe declared that the "whole picture, from Cairo on," was unfit to exhibit. (That would eliminate about three-quarters of the film.)

The City Council finally agreed on five cuts, including one of some length.

Mrs. T. H. Eggert, secretary of the Censor Board, said that the "eliminations would kill the picture."

Gulick-Duggan Wedding

Miss Ethel Agatha Duggan was married to Mr. Earl Gilbert Gulick Wednesday, April 4. Mr. Gulick is connected with the Poster Advertising Association, and is well known in the moving picture industry.

Mrs. Gulick is the daughter of Dr. Homan Valentine Duggan.

Repeal of Censorship Bill Not Likely for Another Year

ACCORDING to a decision which has been reached by the Republican leaders of the New York State Assembly, the Walker bill calling for the repeal of motion picture censorship in the Empire State is to die in the ways and means committee. It is said that this has been definitely decided upon. In commenting upon the report, Joseph A. McGinnies, chairman of this committee, said:

"There is no disposition on the part of any member to report the bill out of committee. Furthermore, there has been no discussion of the bill at any of the weekly conferences of the Republican members of the Assembly. Unless there is some motion made to report the bill, it will stay where it is."

The New York State legislature has about three weeks more to run. There is today every evidence that New York State will have the censorship statute upon its books for at least another year. There may be some changes in the personnel of the commission, but that is a matter entirely up to Governor Smith.

The bill which calls for a 6 per cent tax on the gross receipts of motion picture theatres and other forms of amusement, still remains in committee, and it is generally expected that the bill will die there, or if reported out, will be killed when it goes to a vote. Many leaders are frank in saying that such a tax would prove the straw that broke the camel's back in the case of many motion picture theatres which are now operating in New York State.

The other motion picture bills are of but little general importance, including as they do, one relating to miniature machines.

Preferring to take no chances, both Charles L. O'Reilly, head of the M. P. T. O., of New York State, and its secretary, Samuel I. Berman, will remain close to Albany and its affairs until the session closes. Knowing the game, as they do, they realize that many a bill has been slipped across during the closing hours of a session.

Day Going to Brazil

John L. Day, South American representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will sail on the steamship Western World April 14 on his annual trip to Brazil, where he will spend some time directing the affairs of the offices under his charge.

Europe's Markets Captured by American Films, Bowes Reports

EDWARD J. BOWES, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, returned last week from a two months' trip to Europe. He reports that American photoplays are gaining in the English and Continental markets and that American producers have nothing to fear from productions made abroad.

"American pictures are far in advance of the European film," he said. "There is no threat to the American-made picture in the European product. In comparison with the films I saw abroad, our pictures are thoroughly up to date, far ahead of anything the rival markets have to show.

"In my opinion, the American pictures are certain to continue ahead of the foreign field, because in anything that requires resourcefulness, speed, mobility of temperament and ingenuity we beat the world. The European nations can beat us in anything that involves the patient research and long-continued toil, but in the making of motion pictures it is resourcefulness, speed and adaptability that count. Those qualities will continue to count.

"Foreign companies are realizing that they cannot make a profit on their product unless they can use the American markets, and so far they have not been able to use them to any great extent."

Mr. Bowes conferred with Sir Hall Caine while in London on "The Masters of Men," his latest novel, and induced the famous novelist to prepare the continuity for the picturization himself.

Motion Picture Exposition Plans Centering in New York

PLANS for the Motion Picture Exposition, which will be held at Los Angeles from July 2 to August 4, in connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe Doctrine, are now centering around New York.

Madge Bellamy, who has signed a three years' contract to star in Thomas H. Ince productions, is the official representative of the Exposition and presented to Mayor Hylan an invitation from Mayor Cryer of Los Angeles to visit that city during the celebration. Miss Bellamy is making one of the most remarkable tours in the history of motion pictures. She will visit more than 30 big cities and present to the mayors invitations similar to the one given Mayor Hylan. She also will visit Governors and other prominent state and national officials.

Miss Bellamy was the forerunner of a big delegation from the Coast city. A number of motion picture stars are in the party, among them Ruth Roland.

Western Missouri Exhibitors Make Operating Plans

Consider Probable Affiliation with Kansas Showmen

THE semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Misouri was held at the Baltimore Hotel in Kansas City, Wednesday, April 4. The convention was not as large in attendance as former conventions, because of the separation of the Missouri organization into two sections, the Eastern and Wsetern.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was in Kansas City for the convention, en route to Omaha, Neb., from Little Rock, Ark. Mr. Cohen was accompanied by Michael J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service department of the national organization; William A. True, president of the Connecticut exhibitors; C. A. Lick, vice-president of the national organization and formerly president of the Arkansas organization, and W. D. Burford, of the Illinois exhibitors. Mr. True and Mr. Burford are members of the board of directors of the national organization.

Probably the most important step taken by the members of the Missouri association was the new proposed system of operating and maintaining the organization. Under the new plan, a competent business executive will be engaged to manage the affairs of the organization. The appointment of this business manager was left to a committee appointed for that purpose by the president, Charles T. Sears, of the Sears and Jones circuit, Nevada, Mo.

This committee was immediately appointed by the president. It will also work out a practical means of financing the organization. It is composed of Jack Truitt, chairman, of Sedalia; Tom C. Goodnight, of Warrensburg; William P. Cuff, of Chillicothe; Adolph Eisner, of Kansas City, and S. E. Wilhoit, of Springfield.

Members of the exhibitors' organization were highly in favor of the establishment of a service bureau for the theatre men who are members of the Western Missouri organization. This system will be modeled on the general principles of theatrical service bureaus now in existence.

Denunciation of the advance payment plan was made by the theatre owners.

The question of affiliating Western Missouri with Kansas was brought up. Mr. Cohen stated that the tendency was for the zoning of certain sections served by a common film center. Eastern Missouri exhibitors will be affiliated with those of southern Illinois, the New England States are consolidated and several other consolidations are under advisement.

R. G. Liggett, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, who was present at the Missouri convention, said he would bring up the question at the convention of the exhibitors of Kansas, to be held at Wichita, Monday and Tuesday, April 16 and 17.

Mr. Cohen urged all to attend the national convention. He also spoke of the growth and influence of the motion picture exhibitor and the successful fight he is waging with the producer for the public, as well as for his own existence.

"The motion picture has gone through a complete transformation in the last two years," said Mr. Cohen. "The exhibitor is now in the dominant position in the industry and it is his duty as well as his privilege to stand between his public and any improper suggestion upon the screen. This duty he is performing."

Six million, seven hundred thousand dollars were saved for the theatre owners of the United States through the repeal of the five per cent film rental tax, said Mr. Cohen. He also spoke of the practices of distributing companies which, he said, were unfair to the exhibitors, and told of plans by which the national organization, through the State organizations, hoped to bring them to an end.

Mr. Cohen congratulated the Missouri exhibitors on the good legislative work done at Jefferson City. Concluding his talk, Mr. Cohen said that it was his last speech in this territory as president of the national organization as his term ends at the close of the convention to be held in Chicago.

Mr. True, who is also president of the Theatre Owners Distributing Organization, gave a history and explanation of the new company. Sydney Cohen; W. D. Burford, Aurora, Ill.; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Lewis Ditmar, Louisville, Ky., and Mr. True comprise the board of directors. The aim of the organization is to obtain good pictures from independent producers and directors, for the stockholders' own theatres at reasonable prices. The corporation will establish a complete set of exchanges over the country, and these will serve exhibitor members in their respective territories.

Mr. Burford, also a member of the national board, told of the Uniform Contract and the provisions which the exhibitors would not tolerate. Most important of these were: that no posters or accessories which one exhibitor has bought could be given, sold or loaned to any other exhibitor; that all copy for newspaper advertisements must be furnished by the exchange, whether it was satisfactory to the exhibitor or not; that the exchanges should set all play dates, and the question of arbitration.

C. A. Lock, vice-president of the national organization and formerly president of the Arkansas exhibitors, gave a short talk in which he referred to the industry as a poker game in which three or four men in New York have all the "kitty" and the exhibitor-player was in danger of not being able to play if more care was not taken. Mr. Lick thought the foundation of the industry is the small-town exhibitor.

Speaking of public service, Mr. O'Toole said: "As the editors, managers and operators of the screen press of the United States, you have a great responsibility. You can do much to educate the illiterate. Speak to them through the universal language of the eye. Be big men in your community. Be a large factor. Join various civic organizations and make your theatres become real institutions. You have a wonderful opportunity here in Kansas and Missouri, wonderful states not controlled by a few but by the people."

Just before the adjournment of the one-day convention, a number of resolutions were adopted. Chief among these were that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Goodnight and Mr. Reeves for the excellent work done at the Missouri legislature; the indorsement of the Motion Picture Palace of Progress to be held at the Coliseum in Chicago; that the members commended the action of forming of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, and the endorsement of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in refusing to except Hays' Uniform Contract.

It was decided not to elect delegates and alternates to the national convention at the meeting, but a motion was carried that the president, Mr. Sears, appoint eight delegates and eight alternates.

The convention was attended by a number of Kansas exhibitors who wished to meet the national officers, and the president of the Kansas organization extended an invitation to all those present to attend the convention at Wichita.

New Production Program

Authors to Advise Each Other in Making Films

A production program, said to be unique in the motion picture industry, has just been announced by the Associated Authors, the new film producing company which has recently begun screen work on "Richard, the Lion Hearted," an adaptation of "The Talisman," Sir Walter Scott's celebrated novel, in course of making at the Thomas H. Ince studios for Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release.

In accordance with the new program the authors' trio, consisting of Frank E. Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan, each will be responsible for one production in rotation, the other two advising and assisting with the work in order that it may be as finished in technique as possible.

Mr. Woods has the honor of fathering the initial production of their schedule.

High Taxes in France

Theatres Pay Big Percentage of Receipts to Government

High taxes, against which a widespread campaign is being waged, are responsible for the difficulties of the French theatrical industry, according to a report just submitted to the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., by the American commercial attache at Paris. Before the war theatres in France bore no special taxes and, in fact, cities very frequently voted subventions in the desire to secure good companies. Taxation first made its appearance during the war, and has steadily increased.

Under a law enacted in 1920 there is a tax of from 10 to 25 per cent on moving picture exhibitions, varying according to the gross receipts, in addition to which there is a ten per cent tax on tickets. Thus, the average tax on moving picture exhibitions in Paris is 25 per cent of the total receipts. In the provinces the taxes are still heavier.

Woody Resigns from Select; Will Announce Plans Soon

THE announcement that John S. Woody has resigned as vice-president and general manager of Select Pictures Corporation comes as a distinct surprise to the industry as a whole, but the fact that Mr. Woody has been considering such a move has been known for some time by W. C. J. Doolittle, president of the newly organized Selznick Distributing Corporation, and his associates.

For some time before the Selznick company became involved in the difficulties which they have finally overcome, Mr. Woody has been seriously considering a proposition which he states offers him, by far, the greatest opportunity of his career. At the time the matter was first broached to him, however, he felt that he should remain with the Selznick forces until such time as they might surmount the problems with which they were confronted. Now that the crisis has been passed and the new organization has struck its stride and its future prosperity and permanency are assured, he feels that he can now conscientiously sever old ties for the new.

Mr. Doolittle has realized that there is no inducement he could offer which would persuade Mr. Woody to revoke his decision to leave the organization and he reluctantly and with the sincerest regret accepted Mr. Woody's resignation.

In a statement issued this week Mr. Woody says: "Although I was eager to embark in the new undertaking some time ago there were many reasons why I felt that it was incumbent on me to remain with this organization until I could feel assured that all its difficulties were behind it. I felt a personal obligation to many of the creditors, to my host of exhibitor friends, and to my associates and pals in the field.

"I want particularly to thank exhibitors generally throughout the country for the fine support and co-operation they have accorded both Select Pictures Corporation and myself, during the harassing period through which we have recently passed. I am confident that every exhibitor now realizes that they will not suffer the loss of a single penny through Select and the fact that they will not is due in part to their good tolerance. I think it would surprise almost everyone to know how little actual anxiety made itself manifest when rumors began circulating as to the organization's status.

"I am leaving in the field the finest aggregation of go-getting selling men ever enrolled in one organization and they will, to a man, render the sort of service for which they are famous, coupling with a high type of loyalty to the new organization. I shall make public announcement of my plans for the future very shortly."

Change in Policy Made

Canadian Government Also Changes Name of Film Studio

A change in the name of the Canadian Government's moving picture studio at Ottawa, Ontario, has been decided upon and also a change in the official policy of the film department. Announcement to this effect has been made by Raymond S. Peck, director of the Government department.

The new name of the studio is "Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau," this title replacing the former term of "Exhibits and Publicity Bureau, Department of Trade and Commerce, Canada."

"This change of name has been found advisable to serve as a better index for the work we are doing for the various Federal Government Departments," declared Mr. Peck. "Our main work is the production of motion picture film but we will also continue to do photographic work in all its branches for all departments. No change is contemplated in the personnel of the bureau roganization."

Plan Educational Films

Plans for the production of pictures suited to the work of schools will be discussed Friday afternoon at a meeting of the National Education Association with members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc., at the latter's offices. Charles H. Judd, director of the School of Education, University of Chicago, is chairman of the educational association. Educators from all sections of the country will be present.

South American Reports

American Films Rated High Standard in Censorship Statistics

American films contained less objectionable material than pictures from any other country, according to the censorship board of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, a report on whose activities for 1922 has just been received at the Department of Commerce.

The total number of films submitted for censorship last year was 1,341, produced by 104 different companies, of which 1,058 (or 78 per cent) were American, 140 (or 10 per cent) German, 78 (or 6 per cent) French, and 23 (or 2 per cent) Italian.

Cuts were made by the censors in 68 films, of which 37 were American, 21 German, nine French and one Austrian. While more American films were cut than from any other country, it is pointed out that only 3½ per cent of the American films imported had any matter at all objectionable to the censors, while 15 per cent of the German, 11½ per cent of the French and 25 per cent of the Austrian films were cut.

Special attention is paid in Rio de Janeiro to films for exhibition to children. Out of a total of 52 films the exhibition of which for children was prohibited, there were 22 American, 20 German, four Italian and three French.

Declares Dividend

Evidence of renewed prosperity in the motion picture industry is manifest in the announcement of the Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., that it has just declared a 15 per cent. dividend on stock in its two productions, "The Man from Glengarry" and "Glengarry Schooldays," made in Canada last summer. Payments are being made thirty days before the American release of the first-named production and sixty days before the release of the second.

The dividend has been made possible by a cash advance negotiated with the distributors of the pictures, by Ernest Shipman, the producer.

Top Salesman

Henry Taylor, Universal short product manager, is top salesman in sales percentage in the southwestern territory. This territory includes offices of Omaha, Kansas City, Des Moines, Oklahoma City and Minneapolis. This is the territory over which Cleve Adams has supervision and this is the third sales contest that he has inaugurated this season.

Indications Are That This Year's Naked Truth Dinner Will Surpass Previous Ones

BARRING only a strike of the Cheesecutters' Union, which will provide the atmosphere for "The Land of Haze," one of the acts in the memorable Naked Truth Dinner to be staged by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, everything indicates that the function to be given at the Biltmore Hotel on April 28 will be the most successful of the three annual events to date. With a seating capacity limited to 400 applications for tickets are coming in by the dozen daily.

Among the events calculated to stir the emotions of everyone will be the hanging of the immortals, the official installation of Clem Deneker, the laying of a pipe line from 729 Seventh Avenue to the incinerator, a welcome to Will Hays, and satires on well known pictures that have been successful or otherwise.

The managerial heads behind the event are Harry Reichenbach, producer for the A. M. P. A.; A. M. Botsford, general manager; Tom Wiley, business manager; Charles Einfeld, assistant business manager; Arthur Brilant, treasurer; Victor Shapiro, stage manager; Herb Crocker, librettist; J. Irving Greene, and Lon Young, house managers; C. F. Chandler, scenic decorator and Walter F. Eberhardt, press representative.

Industry in State of Evolution, Says Rowland; Sees New Class of Picture

JUST returned from several weeks on the Coast, where, with Samuel Katz of Chicago, a First National franchise holder and a member of the executive committee, he came close to the work of the many production units at present engaged in making First National Pictures, Richard A. Rowland, manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., stated that the industry is passing through, or has passed through an evolution that will prove of vital importance.

Following his intimate contact with producers, directors and stars, and with the perspective gained through a few days' time in which to analyze the situation and the outlook for next year's market, Mr. Howland's strongest impression is that motion picture producers have finally awakened to the fact that they cannot make stars.

He believes that the big stars, those who have been accepted and really made by the public are the industry's greatest asset. Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Richard Barthelmess, Buster Keaton and a number of others occupy unquestioned positions. But following these are many players of high capabilities upon whom producers have spent fortunes in publicity in unavailing efforts to elevate them to stardom.

Mr. Rowland states unequivocally that the industry is powerless to make stars unless they have been selected by the public.

As a result of this situation, he sees in the immediate future a new class of production, bringing a departure from the star system, but not its abandonment.

"Motion pictures will be divided into two general classes," he said, "the first featuring the big stars, of whom there are but few, and the second, pictures in which the box office value will be determined by the story, adaptation, director and cast. Production is passing through a refining process and exceptional artists who are in line for public-made stardom will get a chance to advance through working in the story-director-cast type of picture. In this way they will be given their best opportunity, in fact the only real opportunity to become stars by public acclamation.

"This change, the effects of which will be noted in next season's product, denotes a decidedly healthy condition in the industry.

"One of the indications of the present tendency is the keen competition for leading players who may be counted upon to strengthen casts, but who are not ranked as stars. In this connection First National is gratified to announce that Virginia Brown Faire, Andree Lafayette, the French war star to be featured in 'Trilby,' Sylvia Breamer and Maurice Canon, the French comedian, have been signed up on long term contracts. More big artists are being secured with a view to building up an acting organization of the highest caliber for pictures of all types.

"Production on the Coast is at its peak and all hands are working hammer and tongs on the big pictures for fall release. Mr. Katz is as enthusiastic as I am about the prospects of next year's First National output. We were on the ground and saw the wonderful things that are being done."

Although certain existing contracts as yet prevent his discussing several important director contracts, Mr. Rowland states that soon an announcement will be made of a line-up of big time productions for next season that will place First National higher than ever as a distributor dealing only in attractions which are real assets to the finer theatres.

"Speaking of First National attractions at present in production or practically completed," he said. "I saw 'Within the Law,' Norma Talmadge's latest, an up-to-date American drama, beautifully directed by Frank Lloyd. It is sure to be a box office sensation. 'Wandering Daughters,' by Dana Burnet, just completed by James Young, is equally certain to be a popular success. 'The Girl of the Golden West' is practically finished by Edwin Carewe. This picture, a very fine production of David Belasco's great popular success, speaks for itself. There is no question about its appeal, especially in view of the present renaissance of the western type of picture.

"Thomas H. Ince regards his practically completed 'Her Reputation' as his greatest effort. In Frank Borzage's 'Children of Dust,' I believe we have a production well up to the standard he set in 'Humoresque.' Of pictures shortly to come into work, 'The Bad Man,' 'The Huntress,' 'Her Temporary Husband' and 'The Lord of Thunder Gate' are all stories with strong popular appeal. In 'Penrod and Sam' I think Beaudine is making a worthy successor to 'Penrod.'

"The rushes I saw of Richard Walton Tully's 'Trilby' enable me to predict that Miss Lafayette will be welcomed as a new and unique personality of the screen. John Stahl, who is just starting on 'Climbing,' has been working for several months on the continuity, casting and general planning for what he is determined to make an even better picture than 'The Dangerous Age.'

"Judging by what our New York executives say, who have seen Richard Barthelmess in 'The Bright Shawl,' there is little doubt about the quality of this and other pictures in our spring output. In conclusion, I may say that the reactions I have received on our story, 'Black Oxen,' Gertrude Atherton's much talked of novel, indicate that the picture will create an equal or greater sensation than the book is now doing."

An Enjoyable Event

Dance of First National Club at Hotel Commodore

The First Anniversary Dance of the First National Club was held Wednesday night, April 4, at the Hotel Commodore.

About three hundred and fifty people attended, including many of First National executives and stars, and the event was both interesting and enjoyable.

The Committee of the First National Club includes President Steve McGrath, Vice-President Bertine Browne; Treasurer Wm. P. Mullen, Secretary Emma Goerke, Financial Secretary James King, and the Committee of Arrangements, Chairman, Clive R. Waxman, assisted by Margaret Hughes, Mildred Kroll, Tesse Michaels, Abbott Obendorfer, Charles M. Kennedy, Raymond Price, Lazarus Bilson and Teddy O'Boyle.

The music was furnished by William P. Kroll's orchestra.

Change Location

Paramount Exchanges Take Possession of New Building

The New York and New Jersey Paramount exchanges, under the supervision of H. H. Buxbaum, district manager, which for many years have been located in the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue, took possession of their new building at 331-37 West Forty-fourth street last week.

The new building occupies a plot 100 by 100 feet. The quarters are said to be the largest in the world occupied exclusively by one company for exchange purposes. There are 16,000 square feet of floor space in the building.

Paramount's new standardized exchange building now being erected by the company in Memphis, Tenn., will be ready for occupancy about July 1. This new one-story building is located at the corner of Front and Linden streets, on a plot 60 by 109 feet. The exchange will serve local territory in the Southern district, under Fred C. Creswell, district manager.

In New Quarters

The Assistant Directors' Association of New York has moved its headquarters to the Motion Picture Directors' Association, 234 West Fifty-fifth street, where all future meetings will be held. The association formerly had club rooms at 220 West Forty-third street, but owing to the large increase of membership were compelled to take larger headquarters.

Holds Annual Meeting

The annual stockholders' meeting of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will convene at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Atlantic City, N. J., Tuesday, April 17. Present indications are that nearly all of the First National executives and stockholders will be present at the sessions.

While no definite program has been announced, it is understood that detailed plans for the coming season will be considered and passed upon.

Shortly after the close of the meetings it is expected that First National will issue an announcement covering the product which will be offered to exhibitors during the coming year.

C. R. Cooper Dies

Cyrus Roswell Cooper, formerly auditor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, died suddenly in Chicago on April 9. The funeral services will be private.

Flaherty Leaves for Samoa to Make South Sea Islanders Film

A NEW epoch in motion pictures which will have a profound influence in developing a broader American international viewpoint, is believed by a number of statesmen, diplomats, authors, publishers, dramatists and scientists to have been started at a dinner given at the Waldorf on the evening of April 10 by the editor and publisher of the Asia Magazine for Robert J. Flaherty, F.R.G.S., who produced the film, "Nanook of the North," the realistic story of the Eskimo. Mr. Flaherty left Thursday, April 12, for Savaii, in the Samoan group of islands in the Southern Pacific, where he will make for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a picture that will do for the South Sea Islanders what he did for the Eskimo in "Nanook."

More than one hundred leading representatives of international statesmanship and finance, newspaper and magazine, literature, the arts, the theatre and motion pictures acclaimed Mr. Flaherty as the prophet of a new school of films.

Colonel Lloyd C. Griscom, president of the American Asiatic Association, former minister to Japan and Persia and ambassador to Italy and Brazil, presided. A group of representatives of those most keenly interested in the extension of American knowledge of foreign affairs joined in a statement which expresses the spirit of the undertaking. Among those who are backing this new undertaking are John W. Davis, former Ambassador to Great Britain; Lloyd C. Griscom, Mrs. Willard D. Straight, Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, John H. Finlay, associate editor, New York Times, and former Commissioner of Education of New York State; Mrs. Oliver Harriman, John Grier Hibben, president of Princeton University; Col. Edward M. House, Will Irwin, James G. McDonald, Secretary of the Foreign Policy Association; Frank L. Polk, former Under Secretary of State; Franklin D. Roosevelt, Ex-Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Miss Lillian D. Wald, Jesse Lynch Williams, Louis D. Froelick, editor of Asia; Chester B. Van Tassel, publisher of Asia; Miss Ida M. Tarbell, Stephen P. Duggan, director, Institute of International Education; Otto H. Kahn, General Tasker H. Bliss, James Montgomery Flagg, William Jay Schieffelin, Miss Rachel Crothers, Henry L. Stoddard of the New York Evening Mail; Edwin R. Embree, Secretary of the Rockefeller Foundation; Rev. Karl Reiland, rector of St. George's Church; Walter Damrosch, Norman H. Davis, Ex-Assistant Secretary of State.

This group expressed their belief that there is need in the country for a school of motion pictures telling the story of various races of the world from the realities of their daily lives, in such dramatic form that they will be equally popular with the present feature film. In a statement issued before the dinner this group said:

"We endorse, as a matter of national importance in acquainting our people with other peoples of the world, the project of making films of other races on the standard of 'Nanook of the North,' which tells the story of the Eskimo from the realities of his life.

"The vital thing Mr. Flaherty, the maker of 'Nanook,' has done is to have found a principle upon which a large number of other films may be made, so full of dramatic interest that they will reach, as 'Nanook' has, the big movie audience of the country and gain its enthusiastic approval. This broad audience at the present time, is not interested in directly 'education' films, but 'Nanook' is drama, education and inspiration combined.

"Because we believe that Mr. Flaherty's work will be the instrument and stimulus for doing in the motion picture field what Asia and similar magazins are doing in the publication field in developing our international vision, we desire to join with Asia in marking the beginning of Mr. Flaherty's career for a set of new pictures, as a matter of broad public significance."

Frank Lloyd Signed by First National

Frank Lloyd has been placed under contract to make a series of Frank Lloyd Productions for First National. It is further announced that the director will start his initial picture for First National immediately upon his completion of Norma Talmadge's super-production, "Ashes of Vengeance," upon which Joseph M. Schenck plans to expend between $500,000 and $750,000.

Because of the long list of artistic and box office successes to his credit, Mr. Lloyd is firmly established in the front rank of directors, First National says. He directed the last three Norma Talmadge productions, "The Eternal Flame," "The Voice from the Minaret" and "Within the Law." These three pictures, offering the greatest contrast in theme and locale, give striking evidence of the broad range of the director's abilities, it is stated.

Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National, expressed gratification at First National's securing one of the greatest directors in the industry. He further expressed the belief that, aside from a few really important stars, exhibitors must depend upon big directors for the kind of product needed to keep the motion picture progressing in accord with the public demand.

New Griffith Player

Long Contract for Neil Hamilton, Who Is In "The White Rose"

Neil Hamilton, who was recently discovered by D. W. Griffith, has just signed a long term contract to appear in pictures made by that producer. He will demonstrate his ability in "The White Rose" which Griffith will present some time this summer.

Hamilton is familiar to many theatre patrons and to most anyone who studies magazines and billboards. For five years he worked as an extra with Kitty Gordon, then with Mae Marsh. He has posed for many commercial artists and is perhaps best known as the "Dobbs Hat" and "Stetson Hat" youth. James Montgomery Flagg, Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy, Charles Dana Gibson and Clarence Underwood are among those who have used him as a model.

On the stage he appeared with De Wolfe Hopper in "The Better 'Ole"; with Grace George in "The Ruined Lady."

R. T. Kane Suggests

Founding of Photoplay Departments in Universities

Declaring that the crying need of the motion picture industry was young blood in the ranks of directors, Robert T. Kane, general production manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, at the weekly meeting of the A. M. P. A., Thursday, urged the motion picture publicity men to inaugurate a movement for the founding of photoplay departments in various universities throughout the country.

Mr. Kane said that as it is now constituted, the motion picture industry has no means of availing itself of the latent ability of millions of young American men who are not in the business. He pointed out that civil engineers, doctors, lawyers, journalists and artists are given opportunities in schools to learn the mechanics of their professions and that the progress in these different lines of endeavor is the direct result of the system of education which constantly brings new recruits into the different professions.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Goodale Flies High Both as Balloon Pilot and Exhibitor

One of the most interesting figures in the picture theatre field of Canada is Capt. Frank William Goodale, manager of Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, for the past year, previous to which he was manager of Loew's Liberty Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. Capt. Goodale has been identified with the theatrical profession since 1896, when, as a boy ten years of age, he secured a job to sell candy in a theatre in Toledo, Ohio. He was quickly promoted to program boy, usher, chief usher and assistant treasurer, after which he turned his attention to back-stage, where he secured the job of property man and then electrician. While employed as the latter, he was bitten by the aeronautical bug through watching the flights of a fellow townsman, Roy Knabenshue, in an airship, Knabenshue being the first flyer on this side of the Atlantic, it is stated.

Capt. Goodale went on the road with the Knabenshue Airship Company in 1905 as lecturer and demonstrator, and after one year of ground work Frank was selected by Knabenshue for actual flying, with the result that Goodale made his first voyage through the air at Luna Park, Chicago, on May 27, 1906. During the following ten years Goodale made a specialty of flying exhibitions at fall fairs and summer parks. He qualified as a dirigible balloon pilot with the Aero Club of America and was awarded license No. 6 by that association. He was also awarded Spherical Balloon license No. 64 showing how early he was concerned with the flying game. He was the first man to fly over New York City at night performing this accomplishment on July 19, 1910, and he was the first aeronaut to make flights in Porto Rico and in the States of Texas, Arkansas and elsewhere.

A New York Manager

For eight years, from 1909 to 1916, inclusive, he was an attraction at the Palisades Park, opposite New York City, from which point he made many flights over the Island of Manhattan. His employer there was none other than N. M. Schenck, who is now the general manager of the Loew Theatrical Enterprises. Through this connection Goodale became manager of one of the Loew houses in New York during the winter months each year, devoting his time to ballooning from the park in the summer season. Having applied for a commission in the United States Balloon Service, it is interesting to note that Goodale received his appointed as a First Lieutenant in the United States Army on April 6, 1917, this being the day on which the United States entered the Great War.

Because of his experience, Goodale was assigned to the U. S. Army Balloon School at Fort Omaha, Neb., for instructional purposes, and while serving in this capacity he spent over 800 hours in the air. He was assigned to test the first army parachute, which he did on October 17, 1917, jumping 1,550 feet and making a safe landing in one minute and 40 seconds. His last flight was made in a spherical two-man balloon on April 17, 1919, when he landed at Arcola, Miss., nearly 1,000 miles from Omaha, after being fifteen hours in the air. He was discharged from the army with the rank of Captain and as a Junior Military Aeronaut. A few weeks later he re-entered the theatrical business as manager of Loew's Liberty Theatre, Cleveland, and was transferred to Loew's Ottawa Theatre on April 11, 1922. During his stay in Cleveland Capt. Goodale was married.

Capt. Goodale was born at Bowling Green, Ohio, on December 21, 1886, and spent his early childhood at Grand Ledge, Mich., but moved to Toledo when a small boy.

Quite an interesting parallel is to be found in the lives of Capt. Frank Goodale and of W. M. Gladish, the Canadian correspondent of this paper. The two were born within four days of each other and Gladish was born at Omaha, Neb., where Goodale served as an army balloon instructor. Gladish lived in New York ten years ago and used to watch Goodale make many of his flights from Palisades Park. Goodale is now the manager of a theatre in Ottawa and Gladish is an editor of an Ottawa newspaper right across the street from the theatre. Goodale is a captain with considerable air experience, but Gladish is a lieutenant in the Canadian Infantry—with both feet firmly on the ground.

Raymond Has Reserved Seat Plan for Continuous Shows

L. Harry Raymond, who formerly was manager of one of the Marcus Loew thetres in Fall River, Mass., and who was manager of the Colonial Theatre in Pittsfield, Mass., three and one-half years, proffers a reserved seat plan for theatres with continuous performances. Mr. Raymond conducted the system in the Fall River theatre. An outline of it follows:

The shows start at 10:30, 1:30, 4:30, 7:30. The regular roll tickets are sold up to 4:30, when the reserved seats go on sale for the 4:30 and 7:30 o'clock shows. One regular set of reserved seat tickets are used daily. Seats may be on sale as early in advance as the manager desires. Patrons entering for the 4:30 show bring to the usher the regular reserved seat stub. If anyone remains from the previous show in the seat that the stub calls for, then the reserved seat buyer is given a seat as near as possible to the one he purchased.

At 7:30 there are certain to be persons leaving the house, thereby vacating seats taken up by holders of the regular reserved seat ticket for the last night's show. Immediately at the close of the 4:30 show the ushers go through the house and on a small slip of paper mark in spaces designated the row and seat number of all vacated seats. They bring each slip to the head usher, who makes out another slip in much the same manner, then taking all of them to the box office. From 7:30 on these slips are sold with a regular roll ticket. The patron gives the slip bearing the seat location to the usher, who seats him accordingly.

The count or estimate of the day's receipts is made by taking figures from the number on the roll tickets sold for the 10:30 and 1:30 shows; from the check of the regular reserved seat tickets and from the numbers from the roll tickets sold at 7:30 o'clock.

Mr. Raymond had no trouble in carrying out this system, but he does not advise its use except in towns or cities where patrons of picture theatres prefer reserved seats. Pittsfield was one of the cities where Mr. Raymond used a reserved seat ticket system for picture shows, this probably being due to the fact that the Colonial is a legitimate theatre and persons going there virtually always have their seats reserved. One of the features of the system, Mr. Raymond says, is that the ushers have no time for loitering and must constantly be on the watch for vacated seats during the evening shows.

Can anybody suggest a better plan?

How the Battles Go

This week we learn that:

San Francisco and suburbs, Milwaukee and Sheboygan have killed daylight saving. Racine has voted for it. St. Louis will probably veto it. The States of New York and Massachusetts will change the time as will the city of Chicago. Baltimore votes May 8.

In the Blue Law fight an exhibitor victory is recorded in Carthage, Mo., and exhibitor defeats in Webster Groves, Mo., Evanston, Ill., and Oak Park, Ill. Hoopston, Ill., votes on it April 17. In Findlay, Ohio, exhibitors opened on Sunday and were not molested.

Brookline, Mass., votes on April 24 whether its traditional dignity shall be shattered by the licensing of a picture house.

Quincy, Ill., Trio Acquires Fort Madison, Iowa, Theatre

One of the largest deals handled by Quincy, Ill., theatrical men was put over by Jack Hoeffler of the Orpheum Theatre, G. A. Urban and George Thompson, well known hotel man. It included the Strand Theatre and the Hotel Anthes property at Fort Madison, Iowa. The Strand Theatre is the largest and most modern house in the city, having been opened about two years ago, and seats 900 on the main floor alone. The house has been operated on a straight picture policy and this will be continued until the stage can be enlarged, when a combined program will be introduced similar to the policy in suecessful operation at the Orpheum Theatre here under the management of Hoffler and McConnell.

The hotel property will be enlarged and modernized and the properties will be operated by the Anthes Strand, Inc., a new company that has been formed under the Iowa laws to handle the business. J. P. Hoeffler is president, G. A. Urban is treasurer and George Thompson is secretary. Charles Dull of Peoria will manage the Strand Theatre for the new owners, and Paul Limber of Bloomington will look after the hotel property. Fort Madison is the home of the Santa Fe shops and an important industrial city. The outlook for fine business is very bright for the new owners.

Some of the managers who take mail order catalogues from the kids for admission to their houses in the small towns at the instigation of the local merchants, will have to lay off the practice, as the Federal Trade Commission has issued an order against the practice on the ground it is a hindrance to interstate commerce. The catalogues were destroyed with the idea of cutting down the business of the mail order houses, it is alleged.

The Lincoln Orpheum Theatre Company has changed its corporate name to the Englewood Theatre Company.

W. T. Pierce of the Peerless Theatre at Kewanee is making an extended tour of the cities in nearby states and is on the lookout for new ideas to be used in his house.

HARRY ASCHER

Junior member of Ascher Bros., Chicago, and managing director of the West Englewood Theatre. They call him the "memory hound." He's a "bear" on remembering names and people.

The Eau Claire Theatre Company at Eau Claire will build a new house there to seat 1,500, and the property has been purchased from A. A. Cutter for the new project. The house will be modern in every way.

The State-Lake Theatre has "The Toll of the Sea" in colors for a feature this week and it is going over in big shape.

The Isis Theatre at Brunswick has been sold by Fred Savage to Harry Norton, who will make some improvements.

A new theatre will be erected soon at Savanna, Ill., by Charley Bruno, who will invest $65,000 in the new house. The house will seat 1,200 and work will begin soon.

The Grand Theatre at Galena will be reopened under the management of Charley Morton, who also operates the Family Theatre at Mt. Carroll.

Oscar Swan and M. H. Lathrop have taken over the New Bedford Theatre at New Bedford and William E. Breed will manage the house. Universal service will be used.

The musicians' and billposters' unions have made an assessment of $1 on each member to help the American Theatrical Hospital.

The Empire Theatre at Two Rivers is now playing a combination program.

J. F. and Roy Witt have taken over the King Theatre at King City from Earl Teenor.

The Model Theatre at Halstead and Sixty-ninth street is being reopened under new management and will use Universal programs. This makes two Model Theatres on South Halsted.

Abe Wallerstein of the Tivoli Theatre at Michigan City has gone east to Baltimore on a pleasure trip.

The Orpheum Theatre at Grand Rapids, which was seriously damaged by fire in January, has been reoponed and the policy will be pictures and musical stock offerings.

Clayton Buck, proprietor of a picture house at Angola, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, listing his assets at $555 and his liabilities at $7,259.78, part of which is due the government for amusement taxes.

The Kedzie Theatre is now using a mixed program of vaudeville and pictures for the week ends. Business is reported as fine.

The efforts of the managers to stave off daylight saving here seem to have fallen flat, for it was stated a few days ago that the clocks will be set one hour ahead on April 29, the last Sunday in April.

The Honeymoon Theatre at South Bend had a fire recently which caused a loss of $5,000. An overheated furnace was the cause of the blaze. Repairs will be made at once.

The Hoyburn Company, which owns the old Hoyburn Theatre at Evanston, has bought from William C. Levere 88 feet of frontage on Chicago avenue for $88,000, and some time next year will build a new house with entrances on two streets, Chicago avenue and Davis street. No architect has been selected as yet but the company expects to put up a house seating at least 2,500.

Ross Palmer has taken over the Liberty Theatre at Libertyville, Ill., and will make some improvements in the house.

With the re-election of Mayor Pearson at Evanston, the hope for Sunday movies for the North Shore city has gone glimmering, as Pearson and his supporters are strong for no Sunday movies.

Walter Lee has taken over the Alamo Theatre at Monmouth and will fix up the house during the next few weeks and enlarge the programs.

The Johnson Hill Company in co-operation with the Palace Theatre at Wisconsin Rapids put over a style revue that packed the house to capacity.

The Rockford Theatres Company, which was just organized at Rockford, has taken over the Midway Theatre which has been under Ascher management since it was built during the war. W. D. Burford is president of the company and Charles Lamb of the Palm Theatre is secretary-treasurer. Rubens Brothers of Joliet, Frank Thielan of Aurora and other prominent exhibitors are interested in the new company. The house will be redecorated and fixed up this summer, so it will be the show place of Rockford when the work is completed. Under the new management and with high class programs the Midway should go over big.

The premiere of "Bella Donna" at the New McVickers Theatre packed the house throughout the week and the attaches were reminded of the opening week of the house by the crowds who jammed the house both day and night.

The Roosevelt Theatre has some good exploitation stunts to put over "One Exciting Night," whose extended run at popular prices began last week. A story in the newspapers was that an extra show had to be put on for the ushers, as they wanted to see the whole picture and owing to the crowds did not have time to stop long enough. Plenty of outside display material, large cutouts and many lights were used.

Tom Ronan, well known Danville manager, has been made general manager of the reorganized Home Theatre Company of that city. Tom is well known to both the legitimate and movie fields and his many friends wish him success in his new undertaking.

Well Oak Park, the largest village in the country, will continue without Sunday movies, as the voters re-elected the old officials and will go along in their calm way, taking an occasional run into the city for the sacred concerts on Sunday, and, of course, staying for the movies.

Gus Trulich is back in the movie business and is now in charge of the Orchard Theatre at 659 West North avenue.

The Ascher houses kept their audiences interested on election night by having returns read from the stage of each house.

The Irvin Theatre at Bloomington put on "Bella Donna" for an extended run and they advertised the picture at the regular prices. Needless to say, the house has been playing to big business. Four complete shows with special music by the Irvin orchestra made a bill that brought in the crowds.

R. W. Dunn, E. G. Gearhart and C. C. Husted have formed a company to manufacture and deal in motion pictures under the name of the North American Film Company, with offices at 7 South Dearborn street. The company has a capital of $50,000.

George Beban was the star attraction at the Senate Theatre last week and the premier house of the Lubliner & Trinz chain did a fine business for Easter week with George and his company as headliners.

Mrs. R. G. Jordan of the Hinsdale Theatre has returned from several weeks' vacation trip to the West Coast.

Hoopston movie managers are working like beavers to win out on Sunday movies and the question will be put to vote of the citizens on April 17, as the city council decided to submit the question to all the voters for final decision.

The Tribune asked five people at the New McVickers Theatre the other day whether they went to see romantic or educational films and the answers were about evenly divided.

Doc Atkinson of the Calo Theatre has hit on the idea of lucky millinery night, so, in co-operation with a neghborhood milliner, every Tuesday night the lady sititng in the lucky seat gets a free hat for being there. Of course the ladies are out in force on Tuesday nights.

At a meeting of the electric sign people recently it was brought out that there are at least 250,000 signs in use every night in this country and more being used every day. The theatres head the list for the number used and two of the largest in the West are the Chicago and New McVickers here.

Here is the latest stunt. The deputy county clerk at Michigan City, a Miss Fern Bahringer, in order to encourage more marriages there instead of at Crown Point, the old Gretna Green, offered free movie theatre tickets to all the young folks who came to Michigan City to get spliced. Business must be good, for she says that more than 500 licenses were issued last year, about half going to Chicago couples.

Louis Murphy is building a new theatre at Spring Valley to take the place of his old house that was recently destroyed by fire.

Charles H. Collins has taken over the Burke and Butterfly theatres at Kenosha and will fix the houses up during the summer.

Walter McCarthy has taken over the Princess and Eagle theatres at Eagle Grove from W. C. Stewart and Arthur Bergum and both houses will be remodeled and fixed up as soon as possible. Walter is going to pep up the programs and add some good musical features to the programs.

LOUIS P. NEWHAFER

General manager of Ascher Bros. for 5 years and associated with Nathan Ascher for 15 years. He's largely responsible for the wonderful spirit of co-operation existing between the Ascher managers.

Cincinnati

Findlay, Ohio, exhibitors are more confident of victory in their fight for a liberal Sunday. They were not molested in their operation last Sunday of the picture theatres. However, W. S. Wallen, president of the Citizens' Welfare League, will swear out warrants, but the managers in return threaten wholesale arrests.

The trial of Walter K. Richards, manager of two theatres, on an indictment charging Sunday operation of his theatres, has been postponed from the original date set. The Ohio Supreme Court will hear arguments about the middle of April in which it has been asked to review a ruling of Findlay Common Pleas and Appellate courts against Sunday picture exhibitions.

There are a number of holdovers in the downtown houses during the current week, April 9, "The Pilgrim" playing a second week at the Walnut, "Bella Donna" being held over for a second week at the Strand, and Gifts playing a second week of "The Third Alarm."

Posters in front of the Capitol Theatre read: "Pola Negri in 'Bella Donna' wears 50 exquisite gowns. She is supported by Conrad Nagel." Two blocks further down the street the lobby poster at the Lyric reads: "Glorious Gloria, more alluring, more beautiful than ever, and her gowns are the last word in Parisian magnificence. She is supported by Conrad Nagel." Some of the local papers have played up this billing, adding that Conrad must have his hands full supporting two ladies so heavily clothed.

A new theatre for colored people is contemplated at the corner of Ashland avenue and Chapel street, as a memorial to Paul Laurence Dunbar, noted negro poet. The ground and building will involve an expenditure of $125,000. The theatre, which will be devoted at least partially to pictures, will seat 1,000, and the project is being financed by a syndicate of capitalists in Cincinnati, Washington and New York.

The Regent Theatre, Hamilton, last week showed "Beyond the Law," based on the life and depredations of the famous Dalton Brothers of frontier days. Emmett Dalton appeared in person.

Big Crowds Turning Out in Albany, Troy, Schenectady

With long lines of waiting patrons, picture theatres in Central New York came back into their own on the Monday following Easter, demonstrating that in spite of a winter of unusual severity and the Lenten season pictures still possess drawing powers second to none. Albany opened with a flourish on Monday, with the Mark Strand presenting "Robin Hood" for a straight six days, while the Leland retaliated with "Bella Donna" running for an equal period, the Clinton presenting "Broken Chains." House records were smashed at both the Strand and the Leland. In the neighboring city of Troy, "Robin Hood" at the New Troy competed with "Glimpses of the Moon" at the American, while "The Voice from the Minaret" successfully sought patronage at the Griswold. In Schenectady, Manager William Shirley of the Strand did a whopping business in a combination of "Daddy" and "The Pilgrim."

Phil Markell, of the Atlas in Adams, Mass., paid a visit to Albany's Film Row the past week. He reported that the country roads were then open and business was on a pickup.

In his palmiest days, Fred Elliott, former owner of the Clinton Square in Albany, could never lay claim to his present title—that of "King Tut." It might be said in way of explanation that the so-called resemblance presented by Mr. Elliott these days to the former Egyptian Pharaoh follows the extraction of many of Mr. Elliott's teeth. Later on he expects to replace them with the store variety.

Moe Mark, Walter Hays and Eugene Falk were in town last week going over the affairs of the three Strand houses in this section of the state and incidentally endeavoring to entangle some of the financial affairs which beset the state in Schenectady.

George Roberts and W. W. Berinstein were in Little Falls Monday arranging for breaking ground for the new $150,000 theatre which will be erected there this summer.

Employes of the Olympic, Palace and Antique theatres in Watertown, N. Y., presented a chest of silver to Dr. and Mrs. J. Victor Wilson, of that city, the past week, in the observance of the Twenty-fifth wedding anniversary which the genial manager of the three houses was enjoying.

The Clinton Square Theatre in Albany will play straight weeks from now on.

Among the exhibitors in Albany last week were R. V. Erk, of Ilion; Mrs. D. S. Regan, of the Star in Greenich, and F. C. Yelverton, of Ballston Spa.

There may be nothing to it, but according to more than one exchange Manager, Uly Hill, who directs the destinies of the Mark Strand in Albany and the Troy in Troy, has a deaf ear, and what is more he always arranges to sit with this ear cocked towards the manager at just the time when the latter reaches the stage of quoting prices.

Charles Wiedman, of the Central, in Albany, has just bought himself a new sedan, and with his brother, Joe, is enjoying it eighteen hours of the day.

The old Hippodrome in Utica, N. Y., has been condemned by city officials as unsafe and has closed its doors. The house has long been regarded as one of the landmarks of Utica. Its owner, "Pop" Linton, is planning to erect a new theatre, probably on the site of the Hippodrome, in the near future.

Joe Contollela, of the Family Theatre in Utica, dropped into town one day last week and was given the glad hand along Film Row.

The opening of the Rose in Troy brought a very handsome floral offering from the F. I. L. M. Club of Albany. The tribute to Jacob Rosenthal was a huge rosebush containing many blossoms. The plant was kept in the lobby for several days and elicited much admiration.

An unusually heavy rainstorm swept over this section of the state last Thursday night and cost exhibitors hundreds of dollars. C. L. Gardner, who runs the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany, attracted only about 150 persons with "Oliver Twist," but instead of becoming discouraged he went down the following morning and booked the picture for later on in the month.

They now have a family orchestra at the Alpine in Troy, a 10-cent house that is going over big. The theatre is owned and operated by Sabin & Judges and about every member of the two families has some particular work to do. Discovering that there was considerable musical talent among the children, the two men have now formed a house orchestra that possesses at least the distinction of never threatening to strike.

Al Bothner, who has been handling the Hall interests in Troy, including the Colonial, the Strand and the Capitol, will associate himself with Jacob Rosenthal in managing the new Rose on and after April 15.

Buffalo

Buffalo exhibitors are up in arms against exchanges who are doing business with churches, schools, clubs and private institutions. At a meeting of the Western New York unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York and the Buffalo Theatre Managers Association, action was taken which pledges exhibitors in these organizations to "lay off" these exchanges.

J. Meyer Schine has entered Western New York. The Gloversville man, who controls a couple dozen houses throughout the central part of the state, has taken over the Temple Theatre on Walnut street in Lockport, N. Y. This house has been conducted by Henry F. Thurston since 1910. It is understood that Mr. Thurston's son will continue to manage.

Henry Carr, manager of Shea's Court Street Theatre, is ill.

Judge John W. Schatt, proprietor of the Opera House in Fredonia, N. Y., was a visitor along Film Row last week.

Walter Bengough, former assistant manager of the Buffalo Strand and now manager of the Jefferson Theatre in Auburn, N. Y., has his office plastered with photos of his famous brother, Bennie Bengough, the former Buffalo baseball team star, who has been sold to the Yanks.

Bill Dillon, manager of the Strand Theatre in Ithaca, N. Y., has turned composer. Bill has now written a new song entitled "Old King Tut."

Leonard Sang, former treasurer of the Criterion, and Sol Myers, former manager of the same house, have taken over the Circle Theatre, a west side neighborhood picture house formerly operated by General Theatres Corporation.

Billie West, former manager of the Central Park and other Buffalo picture houses, is now in the music business. He is employed by the J. N. Adams music department.

Nye Merrill of Waverly, N. Y., a Southern Tier city, has sold several houses located in Sayre, Towanda and Athens to the Comerford Amusement Company of Scranton, Pa. Mr. Merrill is retaining his Amusu Theatre in Waverly. This house, however, has been leased to the Scranton company for a term of ten years. Mr. Merrill's ill health is the cause of his leaving the theatrical business. He will leave at once for New Mexico.

The Criterion started the third week of its new career under the Strand management with a first run picture, "The Ninety and Nine," and business picked up noticeably. The house in the future will try to continue presentation of first runs, although a large number of second run Paramount features have been booked.

Fred M. Shafer, manager of the Lafayette Square, was in charge of the vaudeville show given in the Teck Theatre last Friday night, following the big ceremonial of Ismailia Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

Harry Green, manager of the Premier Theatre, has installed vaudeville as an added feature. J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent, also has found that an added act of some kind helps business.

Herman Schwartz, Batavia, N. Y., butcher, and Joseph Goldberg, a tailor of the same town, have purchased the opera house at Oakfield, N. Y. The amount involved is $20,000. Pictures are being shown at the house, with daily changes.

J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent Theatre and chairman of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, was in New York on April 12 to attend the installation of Charles L. O'Reilly as president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. He was the guest of Mr. O'Reilly at the dinner in the Ritz-Carlton. Mr. Michael is in receipt of a wire from Mr. O'Reilly which indicates that the coming state convention will be held upstate, probably in Syracuse.

Rochester

Beginning this week the public is being given opportunity to help select some of the numbers to be played by the Eastman Theatre orchestra. On each program there will be a request number, which will be decided by popular vote. These numbers will be woven into an appropriate position on the program and are not intended to take the place of the overture, but to supplement it.

Bill Callahan of Regorson Corporation journeyed to New York last week. Alone? Nix! His wife insisted that Bill take his little boy along. Well, every morning in New York Bill had to get up at 8 o'clock to take son out to see the sights. A film man met Bill on Broadway one evening. The son was with him. "Where are you going, Bill?" asked said film man. "Oh, just taking the boy up to see Will Rogers," replied Bill. He didn't dare say that he was on his way to look over the beauties in the Ziegfeld Follies, of which Rogers is the star.

Brookline, Mass., Dignity Still Bone of Contention

Teachers, parents and ministers of Brookline, Mass., met on the night of April 4 and in emphatic terms protested against the granting of two licenses to permit the exhibition of pictures in the town. Three hundred residents previously had signed a petition of protest.

The traditional dignity of Brookline would be a thing of the past if picture theatres were permitted within the town's limits—that was one of the opinions expressed by speakers. School Committeeman Hough said that the town's duty to its children demanded the exclusion of motion pictures. He declared the matter has become an annual proposal, annually defeated, and he urged all voters to register another decisive defeat when the referendum is submitted to them to vote upon at a special election April 24.

The selectmen in 1910 received one petition to establish a motion picture house in the town. In 1911 they received three petitions; in 1913, three; in 1915, four; in 1916, two; in 1919, three. They recently received two petitions and the promise of a third.

Hearings were held on all of the petitions, except those now before the board, but sentiment was so strongly against the admittance of pictures in each case that the petitioners were given leave to withdraw. Some propositions, entailing a cost of from $300,000 to $500,000, were turned down.

The New England district convention of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. will open in Boston, Mass., April 29. This district comprises all local unions in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

Alterations now are in progress at the Goldstein Brothers' New Palace Theatre in Pittsfield, Mass. Automatic ticket sellers and change-making machines are being installed. There will be two of each of these machines located in the center of the lobby. New poster frames are being placed. The Goldstein Brothers also are making improvements in their Colonial Theatre in Pittsfield in preparation for the summer season.

Prof. Harry E. Rodgers, formerly of Brockton, Mass., and now solo organist in the Strand Theatre in Lewiston, Me., was soloist at the sacred concert presented in the Gordon Theatre, Brockton, Sunday evening, April 8. The event was under the auspices of the musicians' union of Brockton.

Harry Zeitz is the manager of the New Zeiterion Theatre in New Bedford, Mass., which was opened April 2. The house is said to have cost approximately $1,000,000. The seating capacity is 2,000. The Zeiterion will have a combination policy. The opening attraction was a legitimate show.

Daylight saving will go into effect again in Massachusetts the last Sunday of this month, April 29. New York State begins daylight saving the same Sunday.

The Merrimack Square Theatre ushers in Lowell, Mass., had their eighth annual dancing party the night of April 5. More than 100 couples were present. The committee in charge of the event was as follows: General manager, Edward Ziskind; assistant general manager, Thomas Dorsey; treasurer, Leo Clark; floor director, William Dare; assistant floor director, John Dennett; chief aid, Francis Finnegan.

"Robin Hood" was held for a second week at the Strand Theatre in Worcester, Mass., starting with the performance Sunday, April 8.

The Theatrical Managers' Association of Worcester, Mass., is co-operating with the Hahnemann Hospital in screening a film that is an appeal for the public to give its support to a campaign for funds to maintain service in the institution for all who require it. The picture, entitled "The Opened Door," was filmed at the hospital. During the week of April 8 it was shown in Poli's, Plaza and Olympia theatres.

The property in Holyoke, Mass., in which is located the Three Stars Theatre, has changed ownership.

The new Coster Theatre in Webster, Mass., was opened April 7. The house is named for George R. Coster, who was associated in its construction with Henry J. Steinberg and Michael Holden.

"The Greatest Menace," a feature that portrays the effects of the drug habit, was shown at the Plaza Theatre in Springfield, Mass., the week of April 1.

Abe Goodside's Capitol Theatre in Springfield, Mass., will celebrate its anniversary the week of April 15.

The Globe Theatre in Springfield, Mass., has been reopened.

Connecticut

Ye New England scribe took a jaunt over to Hartford, Conn., the other night, but the habitual poor service of the New Haven road caused a rather late arrival in the Nutmeg Capital, so proposed calls on a number of managers had to be postponed until a later date. A visit was made to Poli's Capitol Theatre, which proved to be a revelation so far as beauty of design and accoutrements are concerned.

What struck us as most unique was the strains of the great organ coming from a chamber located above the main entrance in the inner lobby. Back of a massive grill of pipes is hidden this chamber, and crowds obliged to wait in the lobby for vacant seats while the picture program is being shown are entertained by the organ music.

A striking lobby display was a large frame about as wide as a six-sheet, but not quite so high, in which the face of Theodore Roberts attracted attention to the announcement of the forthcoming presentation of "Grumpy." Heavy velvet draped the top and sides of the frame and the whole resembled a beautiful painting. Baby spotlights threw a glare upon the display. Amber lights are used in all of the lobby fixtures, including the large chandeliers, a decided relief from the white lights which now appear commonplace.

Not one iota of criticism can be made of the projection in the Capitol. The picture, even from the rear seats in the big house, can be plainly seen and the light was such that details in all scenes were plainly visible. The orchestra of nine men and the organist also deserve praise for their efforts.

The lobby of Poli's Palace was made very pretty by a lighting arrangement, consisting almost wholly of purple bulbs. Cleanliness and the essence of neatness in every detail predominate in the Capitol and Palace. The ushers in the Capitol were very polite in escorting patrons to their seats. Both theatres are the sort that people like to patronize, hence the capacity business which apparently prevails at every performance.

James F. Clancy is manager and George A. Marsh is assistant manager of the Capitol, and the Palace is in charge of Charles Benson.

The following incorporations were filed April 6 with the Secretary of State in the Capitol at Hartford, Conn.:

The Capitol Theatre Corporation of Willimantic, Inc., capital, $150,000; to begin with $20,000; incorporators are Abe Davidson, P. A. Quinn, Sydney Synton.

Star's, Inc., Bridgeport, amusements and theatrical exhibitors, capital, $50,000; to begin with $2,800; incorporators are Mae E. Hogan, Pearl D. Morgan, Thomas P. Gleeson.

A group of Stamford, Conn., bankers have formulated plans for a motion picture studio in Stamford. The studio will be located in Guernsey street, about a block from the railroad station, and will occupy a modern, fireproof, three-story structure. Approximately $350,000 will be invested in the project, of which amount fully one-half already has been supplied by outside capital.

Owners of theatres in Norwich, Conn., will be obliged to keep the auditoriums heated to at least 65 degrees Fahrenheit next fall and winter if an ordinance now before the common council is adopted. In the draft of the proposed ordinance it is stipulated that failure to comply with the ruling would result in a fine of not more than $50 for each offense. A hearing on the ordinance will be held May 7.

The proposed ordinance is said to be the result of several complaints made during the past winter that Norwich theatres were much too cold for comfort. An opinion prevails that this condition may be attributable to the shortage of coal which existed during the cold weather. A number of residents of Norwich are said to have expressed the opinion that the theatres, and other places of amusement as well, should be kept warmer than they have in the past.

Jack Sanson, manager of the Princess Theatre in Bristol, Conn., told his patrons in his newspaper that he was confident they would call the Princess "the house of smiles" when they came to see Chaplin in "The Pilgrim." That boy uses some good phrases.

Texas

The week's visitors to Dallas, Texas, included Manager Rowley of the Best Theatre, Hillsboro; A. B. Moman of the Odeon Theatre, Shawnee, Okla.; Manager Lightman of the Princess Theatre, North Little Rock, Ark.; Manager Lewis of the Palace Theatre, Wylie; Fred Chavey of the Palace Theatre, Cleburne, and Sam Howard of Cameron.

When the film for the Grand Theatre, Alvin, Texas, was delayed, Will Horwitz of the Aris Theatre in Houston came to the rescue by airplane, driving his own ship, "The Good Ship Iris." This was the first air delivery of film in Texas.

Oklahoma

The week's visitors to Oklahoma City included Mrs. W. E. Roberts of the Paramount Theatre, Sulphur; Dudley Tucker of Bristow, Manager Davidson of the Majestic Theatre, Enid; Manager Jenson of Paul's Valley, Manager Hornbeck of the Yale Theatre, Yale, and Josh Billings of the Billings Theatre, Norman, Okla.

Pittsburgh Theatres Off to Flying Start After Easter

Business opened with a bang on Easter Monday in downtown Pittsburgh, but East Liberty, the biggest nearby suburb, did not open as big. S. R. O. was the rule at the Grand, State and Minerva theatres, downtown. The attractions, respectively, were "Safety Last," "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "The Third Alarm." The first two productions were held over for a second week's showing. "Driven" was held over at the Cameo. Business on this production steadily built up the entire week, and the Cameo is looking for new records on the second week. The Grand and State records were smashed. "The Ninth Commandment" at the Blackstone was "pulled" on the third night and "The Christian" substituted. This was second run for "The Christian." "Glimpses of the Moon" at the Olympic and also at the Liberty in East Liberty got fair houses. "Environment" at the Cameraphone did not open very strong but jumped away up later in the week. Manager La Voise said the reason for the pickup was the fact that he had large banners made stating that the production was Harvey Gate's famous story, Chicago Sal. "The Ninth Commandment" at the Regent and "One Exciting Night" at the Alhambra did average business.

On Monday evening, April 2, a woman was shot by her husband in the lobby of the William Penn Theatre, on the North Side, Pittsburgh. The newspapers the following morning carried big stories and streamer headlines about a theatre panic resulting from an attempted murder in the balcony of the William Penn Theatre. When interviewed by the World representative, Manager William Mason of the theatre had the following to say: "Those newspaper reporters certainly must have some weird imaginations. There wasn't a person in the house that knew there was an attempted murder in our lobby. The newspapers are all wrong. Strangely enough, at the time of the shooting, there was a wild and woolly western scene on the screen, and some of the patrons thought that the shots were effects that we had produced, and they told me so.

Warren B. Dygert, Jr., one of Pittsburgh's best known advertising men, has joined the forces of Rowland and Clark as publicity manager. The Rowland and Clark Enterprises are to be congratulated on the array of publicity men in their office, namely: Charlie Frost, J. George Shradle, Robert Wagner and Mr. Dygert.

Jake Richman, owner of the Pearl Theatre, on Fifth avenue, has taken over Professor Gerechter's Best Theatre at Millvale. The Professor is recovering from the effects of a severely wrenched back, which he sustained while helping to push a stalled automobile.

Proprietor Minton of the Columbia Theatre at Erie is recovering from the grip, as is also Mrs. M. Slotkin, wife of the owner of the Olympic Theatre in the same town.

Rudolph Navary, owner of the Liberty and Pleasant Hour theatres, Verona, is back on the job after a business trip to New York. During his absence, his brother Samuel looked after the theatres.

Carl Curry, manager of the Belmar Theatre, was painfully injured recently when an automobile backfired, so that the crank hit him squarely on the nose. Fortunately his nose was not broken, but Curry says the pain was so severe that he could not sleep for two nights.

Fire of undetermined origin, starting in the operator's booth of the Elite Theatre, Homestead, on April 2, did damage to the theatre estimated at $1,400.

P. W. Barrett, popular owner of the Strand Theatre, Parkersburg, W. Va., is again on the job after several days' illness.

On Easter Sunday, the Grace Protestant Episcopal Church in Mt. Washington, Pittsburgh, was destroyed by fire and Henry Poke, owner of the Shiloh Theatre, near the church, offered the worshippers the use of his theatre in which to hold their services. The offer was accepted and the congregation held both morning and evening services in the Shiloh Theatre.

Pasternak New Supervisor of Music in All Stanley Houses

Josef A. Pasternak, conductor of the Philharmonic Society and musical director for the Victor people, will organize and conduct an orchestra at the Stanley Theatre. In addition, he will have entire charge of the music in all the theatres in the United States included under the management of the Stanley Company of America. In the orchestra which he will conduct, to be launched next fall, there will be a membership of twenty-six musicians who make up the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This idea of popularizing classical music by the organization of an orchestra of the higher caliber was worked out by Jules Mastbaum in co-operation with Leopold Stokowski, director of the famous Philadelphia Orchestra, who has a national and international reputation and who was the first recipient of the Bok Gold Medal and $10,000 prize award for the most distinguished services rendered Philadelphia in 1921.

Seven hundred orphan children from St. John's Orphan Asylum were the guests of Manager Frank W. Buhler at the Stanley Theatre on Saturday morning for a performance of "The Pilgrim" which was shown at that theatre during the week.

A picture theatre that itself had motion, now gives to Wildwood, N. J., a most modern and up-to-date playhouse, still, however, bearing the name of the Old Casino that was. In order to transform the old house, it was moved bodily from its foundation, toted into the highway, turned around in the middle of the street and then finally restored to its old site but with the main entrance facing on a thoroughfare having a year-round patronage,

Under the ownership of the Hunt's Theatres, Inc., over $50,000 has been spent in beautification alone, and when completed the new Casino will be one of the most attractive houses along the Coast. When its doors are thrown open, about Decoration Day, with a most attractive entrance leading off from Atlantic avenue, the building will be sufficiently increased in size for accommodation of 2,000 and measures 200 by 150 feet, the old building having dimensions of 120 by 170 feet. A $25,000 organ is being installed. The interior color scheme is a combination of gray and blue in the upholstery, with an artistic regular size stage which may be used in conjunction with vaudeville or stock and moving pictures. It will be under the management of Wally Helston, formerly manager of the two theatres at Jenkintown, the Hunt and Auditorium, which are part of the Hunt chain. With the Casino, Hunt's now control two Wildwood houses.

The Chamberlain combination has been augmented by the building of a house at Mt. Carmel, Pa., seating 1,000, which will open by June 1. The Victoria Theatre, which is part of the L. J. Chamberlain string in Shamokin, Pa., and which was constructed five years ago, has been entirely remodelled into one of the finest theatres in that section of the country. A new screen was installed this week. A new stage setting will consist of a heavy plush velvet, carmine, draperies, and heavy silk corn-colored draw curtains, which cost over $2,500. The sides are adorned by two large pedestals surmounted by floral embellishments.

One of the unique features is the attractive rest-room centered with an electrically lighted fountain with a globe of changeable colors and sprayed constantly by fountains issuing from the circular enclosure. The decorative scheme of the rest-room harmonizes with the changing colors of the fountain. The Chamberlain interests, of which Boyd Chamberlain is general manager, also control theatres at Sunberry and Tamaqua.

The new theatre recently acquired by Michael Lessing and known as the Diamond Theatre, is now running in full swing as a first-class picture house. It is an attractive, modern theatre seating 950. This is the third theatre added to the Lessing interests, the other two being the Standard at Camden, N. J., and the Collingwood at Collingwood, N. J.

After a temporary shutdown, following a fire which damaged part of the interior, the Photoplay Theatre of Duncannon, Pa., of which W. H. Sheffly is proprietor, is again open.

P. Siewell of Shenandoah, who conducts the Arcade Theatre in that city, spent the week end in Atlantic City visiting his family and en route home called on the Philadelphia exchange houses.

A large theatre, arcade and store building will be erected at Kentucky avenue and the Boardwalk, Atlantic City, by the Stanley Company of America. The proposed structure is now being planned by the Hoffman-Henon Company.

Representatives of every known industry in Philadelphia will join with city officials and prominent theatrical men to make the testimonial dinner to be given Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger and Thomas M. Love one of the outstanding affairs of its kind in the history of the theatrical and motion picture fraternity of this city. It will be held in the Bellevue Stratford, Tuesday evening, April 24, under the auspices of the employes of the various theatres and picture houses which come under the management of Mr. Nirdlinger and Mr. Love. Arrangements have been made to take care of several hundred guests.

Webster Groves, Mo., Won't Give Up Its Indigo Sunday

Webster Groves, Mo., will continue blue on Sundays. The citizens of the St. Louis suburb so concluded on April 3 when by a vote of 1,910 to 1,464 they decided in favor of continuing the enforcement of the city ordinance that prevents the showing of pictures on Sundays, etc. Webster has one theatre, the Ozark, built about two years ago. This house compares very favorably with any in this section. The ordinance against Sunday amusement was passed shortly after the town was incorporated and long before a picture theatre was thought of.

The safe of the Shaw Theatre, St. Louis, was broken open by burglars on April 1. They obtained $400 in cash. The St. Louis Amusement Company owns the theatre.

The five aldermanic candidates indorsed by the Christian Council of Carthage, Mo., a blue law organization, went down to defeat at the municipal election on April 3. The injection of the Sunday closing issue brought out a record vote.

Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis in co-operation with the St. Louis Safety Council are showing free of cost the film "A Day with the Careless Driver," which is designed to reduce automobile accidents.

Daylight saving agitation is dying down in St. Louis and it now looks certain that no such bill will be presented to the new Board of Aldermen. A survey of the aldermen revealed but one man for clock change, Alderman Clinton E. Udell of the Twenty-third Ward, who has always been identified with the reform element.

The New Dreamland Theatre, Belleville, Ill., has been reopened by Noah Bloomer. He also operates the Gayety at Freeburg, Ill.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" enjoyed a very prosperous week's run at the Pershing Theatre, St. Louis, and has been held over for another week. Hodkinson rented the theatre outright for the run.

On April 3 Ed Fellis, owner of the Orpheum, Hillsboro, Ill., was elected to the County Board of Supervisors on the Republican ticket.

Jim Drake has reopened the Temple Theatre at Alton, Ill. It will be conducted as a combination house.

A. C. Norwein, who recently sold his theatre holdings at Bonne Terre, Mo., is now affiliated with the Nash Motor Car Company in St. Louis.

Tom Reed is back from a trip to Atlanta, Ga. He went there to visit his daughter who is attending school there, but took advantage of the southern journey to study the methods of the leading exhibitors of the Southland.

Jim Reilly of the Princess, Alton, Ill., is about again. An affection on his hands confined Reilly to his home for several days, but he is his old self once more.

G. E. W. Griffith, who has perfected an arrangement to open a new tent theatre in Centralia, Ill., to be known as the Broadway Theatre, was in town arranging his early bills. He expects to get under way about May 15 and possibly earlier.

Workmen have started construction of Charley Kalbfell's new airdome at 5008 Claxton avenue, St. Louis. The building permit calls for an expenditure of $5,000 but Charley plans to spend considerably more.

Equipment for the new theatre at Leffingwell avenue and Morgan street, St. Louis, being erected by the Davis Realty Company, a local syndicate, has been purchased from the St. Louis Exhibitors Supply Company. It consists of two Simplex Mazda equipped projectors, a Minusa screen, Haertner transverter, etc.

Theatres Spring Up Fast in the Kansas City Territory

Every week brings an announcement of a new theatre to be built in this territory. This week it is the new $40,000 house being built by Dr. W. O. Thompson of Dodge City, Kans. The theatre will be opened in the early fall and will be under the management of W. H. Harpole, who has the Cozy Theatre at Dodge City.

The seating capacity will be about 600. The seats will be divided between the first floor and a balcony. On the mezzanine floor will be rest rooms for ladies and gentlemen. The theatre will also be equipped with a novel feature in the form of a mirror-walled nursery, where mothers may take crying babies and still view the production by means of the mirrors.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors seen at the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Missouri, held at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, Mo., April 4, were: L. W. Hunt, Higginsville; F. S. Weary, Richmond; T. C. Goodnight, Warrensburg; S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield; Jack Truitt, Sedalia; A. F. Baker, St. Joseph, Joplin and Springfield; Harry Till, Braymer; F. A. Wasgien, Brookfield; W. Thompson, Plattsburg, and W. P. Cuff, Chillicothe.

Exhibitors from Kansas City, Kans., who attended the convention were: C. A. Smith, Fred Meyn, William F. Meyn, R. G. Liggett, C. A. Ricksecker and C. E. Cook.

Sam Harding of the Liberty and Linwood theatres, Kansas City, is in New York looking over some of the pictures for next year.

Leon Weil, formerly owner of the Broadmour Theatre, this city, was visiting various film exchanges last week.

Joe Cooper, a well known exhibitor in this territory, stopped over in Kansas City for a short while on his way back to Oklahoma City from New York.

"Doc" Gees of the Mystic Theatre at Mulberry, Kans., was a visitor last week.

Exhibitors attending the convention last week of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Missouri were somewhat surprised to see a large sign in the meeting room which had printed up on it: "Uppvisare Registrera Har." It all came about through the kidding of Lawrence E. Goldman, formerly secretary of the organization. Ordering the sign from a Swedish sign painter, Mr. Goldman told the man to make him a nice Swedish sign. The man did. Translated, it all means, "Exhibitors, Register Here."

Gus M. Shriner, who purchased the Gem Theatre, Kansas City, same time ago, has announced that he will remodel it. The building, which is on a lot 40x137 feet, will be extended back about forty feet and a balcony added. The two improvements will increase the seating capacity of the motion picture house to 400. Mr. Shriner, who operates the theatre, took title from Hugo A. Brecklein.

Baltimore

Louis A. DeHoff, booking manager of the Combined Whitehurst Interests, who has been seriously ill with "Sleeping Sickness" for several weeks, is now steadily improving and his recovery is expected.

Sentiment against Daylight Saving in Baltimore among the people is very strong, according to the observations of the members of the Association Opposed to Daylight Saving comprising picture men and various business and civic associations and clubs of the Monumental city. Louis Schlichter, manager of the Bridge Theatre, thinks that the vote at the coming municipal election on May 8 will be very heavy against it. A large card party was given under the auspices of the Exhibitors League of Maryland on Friday afternoon, April 4, on the Century Theatre Roof to raise funds to fight the measure. The affair was in charge of Harry Cluster, manager of the Crystal, and Mr. Schlichter and Mrs. L. F. Hamrick.

Lubin's Theatre, operated by the Peoples Theatre Company, has been extensively renovated and repainted. Sidney B. Cohan has been appointed the managing director and is now making an intensive campaign for more business. William Tyler remains manager.

The $10,000 orchestral organ being installed in the Crystal Theatre has been completed and music was furnished by the instrument for the performances beginning Monday, April 9. Harry Cluster, manager, arranged for the installation.

J. Louis Rome, managing director of the Rialto and other Baltimore theatres, arranged to have a soloist at the Rialto to render selections. Helen Yorke, who recently finished an engagement at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, was the first one engaged. She sang there for two weeks beginning April 2. Mr. Rome also is booking first run pictures during the last three days of the week at the Rialto, the first being "The Marriage Chance" and the second "The Super Sex." The Rialto is a residential house seating 499.

Guy L. Wonders, that live wire manager of the Rivoli, arranged another musical treat for his patrons when he engaged Victor Herbert, famous musical composer, to be the guest manager of the Rivoli symphony orchestra during the week of April 9.

San Francisco and Suburbs Vote Against Changing Time

There will be no daylight saving plan adopted in Greater San Francisco this year. The San Francisco Board of Supervisors, after listening to the objections of theatrical interests, has decided to uphold the recommendations of the Public Welfare Committee that the plan to set clocks ahead one hour be abandoned. Suburban units of the city, such as Oakland, Berkeley and Alameda, have taken their cue from the decision of the Board of Supervisors and there will be no daylight saving plan adopted there.

The Pacific Theatrical Enterprises has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $500,000 by E. R. Hough, R. M. Salmonson and H. Lonigo.

The initial presentation of "Driven" at the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, was preceded by an automobile parade on Market street in which cars of both old and new styles were shown to illustrate the evolution of the horseless wagon. A safety first parade was also held.

The success met by the management of the Century Theatre in offering one-day runs of big feature pictures has been such that a second repertoire week has been arranged. The program for the second week includes "Suds," "Kismet," "A Tailor-made Man," "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave," "The Conquering Power" and "Peacock Alley."

The Francesca Theatre on upper Market street is being redecorated, the work being carried on without interfering with business. This house maintains a straight 10 cent admission policy at all times.

C. C. Griffin of the Piedmont Theatre, Oakland, has been chosen the official delegate to represent the M. P. T. O. A., Northern California Division, at the national convention to be held at Chicago in May.

The new Excelsior Theatre at Mission and Excelsior streets, San Francisco, has been equipped with two Powers No. 6B projection machines and Powers-General Electric high intensity lamps.

Karl K. Kennedy, of the United Theatres, Los Angeles, was a recent visitor at San Francisco and during his stay in the northern part of the State made arrangements for taking over the Liberty Theatre at Fort Bragg. This house will be the first of a chain planned for this part of the State. Six theatres are being operated by this concern in the Los Angeles territory.

Two Simplex machines have been installed in the McCloud Opera House, McCloud, Cal., which is operated under the management of Mrs. Victoria Murray.

The Half Moon Bay Theatre, Half Moon Bay, Cal., is being remodeled, the installation of an inclined floor being one of the improvements.

T. C. Reavis, who conducts a couple of picture theatres at Santa Rosa, Cal., and who is building another fine house there, was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, his first in several weeks, having been confined to his home by an attack of influenza.

Charles Thall, formerly director of publicity for Associated First National at San Francisco, has been placed in charge of the publicity department of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, succeeding W. J. Murphy.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Ltd., Honolulu, T. H., has returned to San Francisco from a business trip to New York.

A $15,000 organ is being installed in the new Hayward Theatre at Hayward, Cal.

The theatre managers of Oakland, Cal., recently turned the tables on the representatives of the press by turning critics and reporting the annual Press Club Show held at the Auditorium Theatre. Among those who handed copy to the local papers were Rex Midgely, of the American Theatre; Oliver Kehrlein, of the Franklin; Harry Cornell, of Pantages; M. A. Anderson, of the Orpheum; Herbert A. Harris, of the Century, and Carsten Dahnken, of the T. & D.

Lawrence Borg, of the Varsity Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., is taking an active part in the organization of the West Berkeley Merchants' Association.

Seattle

G. H. Dickerson, of the Ellensburg Theatre, Ellensburg, Wash., spent a few days in Seattle. He contracted for fifteen United Artists pictures, including "Robin Hood." Dickerson operates in competition with two other houses in Ellensburg.

J. G. Blackman, manager of the Rialto, Wenatchee, Wash., has tied up the local Elks for an early presentation of "Robin Hood."

And while we are talking of "Robin Hood," it has already been dated up for return engagements in three of the key towns at the same houses that first introduced it to patrans, for April and May showings. The lucky houses are the Liberty, Seattle, the Majestic, Portland, and the Rialto, Tacoma.

Manager John Danz of the Colonial Theatre gave a party to over sixty youngsters from the Ryther Child Home to see Tibi Lubin, the Jackie Coogan of Bohemia, in "The Prince and the Pauper." The entertainment was arranged by the motion picture committee of the Seattle Council, P. T. A., and the Colonial management. Transportation was furnished the children.

H. A. McGill, Port Orchard exhibitor, had open house to do his share in the local celebration of the opening of the new scenic highway. In addition to free shows, Manager McGill donated his house for a banquet which he held in the evening.

The Columbia celebrates two "Vitagraph Weeks" in succession, leading off with the "Ninety and Nine," April 7. The following week "A Front Page Story" will be the headliner, with Larry Semon in "The Counter Jumper" to provide the laughs. This is unusual as the Columbia rarely houses other than Universal attractions.

Tacoma is soon to have a Blue Mouse Junior, owned by John Hamrick and the Blue Mouse Theatre Company. It will be a suburban house, patterned, on a small scale, after the Seattle house, and will be at Twenty-sixth and Proctor streets.

Los Angeles

Mike Gore is so well pleased with the results of his all-comedy bill at the Kinema, Charlie Chaplin in "The Pilgrim" and Baby Peggy in "Peg o' the Movies," that he has booked the double combination over the entire circuit of the West Coast Theatres. The double comedy bill has been held over at the Kinema for the second week.

E. C. Bostick, manager of the Loew's State Theatre, got away to a big opening with "Where the Pavement Ends." The leading players in the picture made a personal appearance at both matinee and evening performance on the opening day.

Al Ramish booked "Oliver Twist" for another extended downtown run at the Alhambra after it had played three weeks at the Kinema.

Jack Root has booked "Main Street" for an extended run at the Mission to follow "The Girl I Loved."

Sid Grauman will close "Robin Hood" at his Hollywood Egyptian Theatre Sunday and open Monday with "The Covered Wagon." "Robin Hood" hangs up a new record for a continuous run in Los Angeles, having played twenty-five weeks.

T. L. Tally is holding "The Birth of a Nation" over for a third week at his Broadway Theatre and incidentally is doing three of the biggest weeks in the history of the theatre.

Washington, D. C.

The privilege of smoking extended to male patrons at the Virginia Theatre, Washington, D. C., has resulted in a great increase in box office receipts. This is the second theatre on Ninth street to advertise itself as a "smoke house." It is understood that a third house has secured a permit from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, but has not availed itself of the privileges as yet. The Virginia Theatre is operated by Miller & Malone. While their patronage has increased to a considerable extent, they still retain a large part of their old business.

Tom O'Donnell, of the New Meader's and Senate theatres, has gone into the garage-building business as a side line. He has the exclusive agency for Washington for a new type of stucco garage. Mr. O'Donnell was formerly at the head of the General Battery Company, but he has disposed of his interest in that concern to take up his new garage line.

The Chevy Chase Theatre has decided to "sit tight" with respect to the demand made upon them by various civic organizations of Chevy Chase that it remain closed on Sundays. The management has declined to make any statement in the matter, but it is understood that there is quite a question as to just how much influence these civic organizations involve.

A. N. Waters, manager of Crandall's Theatre at Ninth and E streets northwest, has been appointed to the managership of Crandall's Central Theatre, in the same block on Ninth street, and will hereafter supervise both theatres. He takes the place of William V. Boyles, who resigned the management of the Central.

Oscar W. Morgan, Cosmopolitan field manager, was in Washington last week as the guest of Tom Moore of the Rialto Theatre.

Milwaukee Folk Repudiate Daylight Saving at Polls

Daylight saving, attacked relentlessly by picture interests for several years, has been repudiated at the polls in Milwaukee. After a bitter campaign, which eclipsed all other election issues, opponents of the daylight saving plan registered a vote of 34,530 in the referendum as compared to 24,258 for the long day. The total vote on the question was 10,000 heavier than on the school board race, indicating the extent to which interest in the matter had been aroused.

The victory for opponents of the daylight saving plan may well be hailed as a victory for the picture men. Led by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Milwaukee, exhibitors took a foremost part in moulding public opinion. Under the personal direction of Joseph Mergener, executive secretary, every member of the exhibitor organization circulated petitions and dodgers and ran films depicting the harm resulting from the ordinance. In addition, many novel methods were used by individual showmen to bring about a vote against the plan. Motion picture men aligned themselves with milk dealers, the railroad brotherhoods and members of the labor unions in the fight.

While Milwaukee was voting to kill daylight saving, which has been in effect four of the last five months, Sheboygan took similar action. Racine, however, voted against standard time.

Shorewood citizens have decided they want a commercial picture house. Although not voting directly upon the question, members of the aristocratic village adjoining Milwaukee indicated clearly what the views of the majority are when, at a recent election, they defeated the entire slate of reform candidates advanced by the faction opposed to a theatre. The three present trustees, who had been warned recently that they would not be returned to their seats because of their liberal views upon the matter, polled a vote of three to one against their opponents. With the sentiment of the village expressed through the election, it is believed probable that a series of court actions aimed to halt the building of the village's first theatre will be dropped.

Although more than 200 persons were in the Magnet Theatre when it was attacked the cool-headed work of John Clark, doorby fire recently, a panic was averted through keeper. Detecting smoke from the basement, Clark rushed down with a fire extinguisher and, when he saw that his efforts were of no avail, turned in an alarm. He then hastened back to the theatre and calmly announced that there was a fire, but that there was no danger unless the audience lost its head. Under his direction four lines were immediately formed and the theatre was emptied in orderly fashion in a few minutes.

The blaze was confined to the basement of the showhouse and the loss was not great, although several hundred patrons of the Whitehouse Theatre next door were forced out by the smoke.

The Magnet is Milwaukee's oldest downtown theatre. It is situated on Third street, between Wells and Grand avenues, and is under the management of Nicholas De Lorenzo.

Joseph Gorski, who built the Eagle Theatre at Eagle River, Wis., two years ago, died recently. The theatre now is being operated by his sons. The Eagle was Mr. Gorski's first venture in the picture field.

E. J. Bregger, of the Uno Theatre at Crystal Falls, Mich., is building a new 700-seat house which will be ready some time this summer. With its opening the Uno will cease to exist.

Mark Thomas, of the Colonial Theatre at Iron Mountain, Mich., was a member of the bowling army which invaded Milwaukee during the A. B. C. tournament in March.

John D. Cuddihy, of the Cuddihy Theatre at Calumet, Mich., has returned to that city from Panama, where he visits annually.

The Temple Theatre of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., which had been closed for some time, has been reopened by W. G. Cook. The Rex Stock Company was featured as the opening attraction.

"Park your auto in our garage while you park yourself in here to view our show."

Eddie Weisfeldt, looking always to the comfort of his patrons at the Strand, downtown Milwaukee house, has completed arrangements whereby he will carry out the above idea. With the opening of a new garage and storage house on Sixth street and Grand avenue, a short distance from his theatre, he has arranged with the owner so that parking space will be provided free of charge for any members of the Strand audience wishing to take advantage of his offer.

Anyone coming to the Strand with a machine will be allowed to drive into the garage, where he will receive a voucher. This voucher will be presented at the Strand box office and stamped when a theatre ticket is purchased, so that when it is presented later for the car the garage man will know that the Strand has been visited.

The Shubert Theatre, on various occasions the home of stock and pictures, is to be sold on the auction block on May 7 to satisfy a judgment. Announcement of the coming sale has been posted by the sheriff. The notice says the theatre and all apparatus, scenery and furnishings are to go under the hammer.

The showhouse, one of the oldest in Milwaukee, has been closed since a combination stock and movie venture failed to pay three months ago.

According to the sheriff, the judgment was obtained in foreclosure of mortgage proceedings begun more than a year ago by the Academy of Music Company against the Academy Realty Company. The judgment was for $79,900.

Plans for a "talent discovery concert," a new departure in Milwaukee picture houses, have been announced by Leo A. Landau, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, a leading downtown house. The concert, which is to be held at noon on Sunday, April 15, will feature non-professional talent from Milwaukee and the rest of the state. Anyone who can play, sing, stage a novelty act or perform in any other way has been invited to take part. These members will precede the regular picture program. The admission price will not be raised for the occasion.

Michigan's finest community theatre, a part of a $300,000 building, is ready to be opened at Wakefield. Dedicated to the American Legion, the entire structure typifies the most modern ideas in a building of such a kind. Besides the theatre, seating 1,500, the building houses a municipal dance hall, swimming pool and billiard hall. It is two stories high. The windows are of stained glass, each one bearing a service emblem.

While the building was erected by the taxpayers of the city, the showhouse has been leased out to a private exhibitor.

Another Michigan city erecting a community theatre and recreation center of this type is Ironwood, which is spending several hundred thousand dollars on a structure.

Louisville Interests Seek to Buy Masonic Building

It became known here a few days ago that two local men have made efforts to purchase the old Masonic Temple building, now housing the Strand Theatre, but owned by the Shubert interests of New York. The owners tried stock shows for a few weeks last winter, found the going rough and leased the house to the Fourth Street Amusement Company for a period of years.

C. C. Hieatt, president of the Consolidated Realty Company, was recently in New York, but on his return refused to discuss the Shubert matter. G. H. McAllister, head of a realty firm bearing his name, stated that he made an offer of $300,000 for the building, that being the price paid for it by the Shuberts when purchased by the Masonic organization a couple of years ago. McAllister showed a letter from the Shubert interests in which they stated that a sale at less than $450,000 (or a 50 per cent profit) would not be considered.

Erection of the Elks hotel and lodge building a few doors east of this building is increasing the value of property on the block materially. Hieatt is also interested in other property on the same block.

Exhibitor interests are behind the incorporation of the Rainbow Gardens Company, Louisville, capital $30,000, chartered by Joe Steuerle, Adolph Reutlinger and Leona and Walter Davidson, all connected with the Walnut Amusement Company, operating the Walnut Theatre. Steuerle and Reutlinger are also interested in the Fourth Avenue and Broadway Amusement enterprise groups. The new company will operate the old Magnolia Gardens, at Third and Avery streets, operating as Rainbow Gardens, and featuring refreshments, good music and dancing. The orchestra of Walter Davidson, of the Walnut Theatre, will be used.

Charles Miller, for ten years manager of the New Albany Amusement Company, New Albany, Ind., recently resigned at a meeting of the board of directors, his resignation being due to the recent death of his wife and a desire to retire from business cares.

Fire starting in the Dixie Theatre at Tazewell, Tenn., resulted in a $30,000 fire, doing considerable damage in a small town business block. The town has no fire protection and called on Middlesboro, Ky., and Knoxville, Tenn., for assistance.

Miss Douglas Robinson and W. M. Breeze have bought out the Breeze Bros. Princess Theatre, Flemingsburg, Ky., and will move into a new building. The opening will be April 16. The house will be known as the New Princess.

Straight From the Shoulder Reports are used by thousands of exhibitors. There's a good reason why.

FILM EXCHANGE PERSONALITIES

Seattle

All the Universal field force, as well as managers from nearby exchanges, in short, everyone who could get in, spent Tuesday, April 3, in Seattle at the exchange, welcoming Carl Laemmle, who spent a very busy day in Seattle.

Goldwyn this week opened a six-weeks' sales drive, with the field force covering the territory served by the Seattle exchange, Washington, Idaho and part of Montana. Results are already looming up.

L. W. Barclay, exploitation manager on the coast for Goldwyn, claims the long distance commuting record. Barclay lives in Los Angeles and is at present commuting to Seattle, where he is busy on "The Christian." He may hop off any day for a week-end at home, and be back here before he is missed.

H. W. Boehme, of the sales force of Universal, is ill at his home.

H. M. Glanfield, formerly with Vitagraph, has been appointed salesman out of the local Universal office on Jewels and features.

"Cherry" Malotte has left Universal to represent F. B. O. in the Spokane territory. Cherry replaces V. S. Brown, who has returned to Baker, Oregon, to attend to personal matters.

S. D. Perkins, who has been connected with the sales force of Goldwyn in Seattle for a short period, has gone to Portland, where he will work out of that exchange. Perkins came here from Los Angeles.

San Francisco

Eddie Armstrong, Universal assistant general sales manager, recently left his San Francisco headquarters for a short visit to the exchanges in the Northwest.

Fritz Tidden has succeeded Hal Reed as director of publicity for the George A. Oppenheimer Exchange, San Francisco. Luck!

The San Francisco Universal branch recently had a visit from Carl Laemmle, Eugene H. Roth and Julius Bernheim.

W. A. Crank has resigned as manager of the San Francisco branch of the American Releasing Corporation to attend to mining interests.

Charles Muehlman, manager of the San Francisco Associated First National branch, motored to Los Angeles recently to confer with John McCormick, western representative.

Morris Markowitz is proving the baseball fan of the Associated First National office, San Francisco, being the only one to get away to witness the opening game of the season.

H. Bradley Fish, district manager for Vitagraph, is back at his San Francisco headquarters again, following a tour of the territory.

Pittsburgh

Moving days are numerous on Pittsburgh's Film Row, with Eddie Wheeler moving his Penn Film Service Corporation to its new location on the second floor of 1028 Forbes street, into the space just vacated by M. Janicks and his Exhibitors Supply & Sign Exchange, who has gone back to his old location at 1000 Forbes street, at the corner of Hooper. The Apex exchange, now located at 1201 Liberty avenue, will move to Forbes street in the near future. They will occupy space at 1026 Forbes street. The Columbia exchange, now located on Ninth street, will move to 1010 Forbes street on May 1.

Joseph S. Skirboll, former manager of the Pittsburgh First National branch, left for California a few days ago to begin his new duties as western division manager for the same company, with headquarters in Los Angeles. Mr. Skirboll was presented with a trunk by the employes of the First National, Educational and Columbia exchanges, and the male members of the Rowland and Clark Theatres organization here presented him with platinum diamond-studded cuff links.

The Press Film League has been formed with six baseball teams representing as many film exchanges of Pittsburgh. The boys have gone on record as being against daylight saving, saying that they will begin their ball playing an hour earlier in the evenings.

Wesley Bachmeyer, division manager, and Mr. Connors, sales manager of Metro, were recent visitors at the local branch office.

Harris Silverberg, well-known local film salesman, has deserted the Pittsburgh field and gone to Detroit to work for Goldwyn.

T. P. McLaughlin, who for five years represented the Famous Players on the road in the Pittsburgh territory, has gone to St. Louis and is working for Hodkinson there.

Alfred Kent, traveling auditor for Universal, is spending a few days at the Pittsburgh branch.

W. H. Barnes, who has been on the road for Metro in the Boston and New York branch offices, has come to Pittsburgh and is working the northern territory out of the local office.

St. Louis

Harry Weiss visited Chicago last week.

C. D. Hill of Hodkinson, Floyd Lewis of Select and Jack Weil of Goldwyn spent several days out in the territory.

The St. Louis Film Salesmen's Club will attend the Browns-Cardinals baseball game on April 14 in a body.

United Artists moved into exchange space in the Select Picture headquarters, 3332 Olive street, last week.

Martin Schmalzbeck, travelling auditor for Fox, is here. He probably will spend two or three weeks in this vicinity.

Albany

Robert S. Bendell, who formerly managed the F. B. O. exchange in Albany, N. Y., but who severed his relations with that concern to enter the insurance business a number of months ago, has just been appointed manager of the American Releasing exchange in Albany, succeeding A. J. Blanke, who was recently transferred to Albany from Boston.

Frank Bruner, who is easily the best dressed exchange manager in Albany, even though some of his shirt creations fairly howl, has purchased a Buick touring car.

Robert Smeltzer, eastern district manager for Pathe, was here the past week conferring with Frank Bruner, local manager.

Vic Bendell, manager for F. B. O. here, attended a sales meeting in New York City Sunday.

Lee Langdon, booking for First National here, is once more back at his desk, following an illness of several days.

Alec Herman, manager for First National here, will attend a meeting of the Buffalo, Albany and New York exchanges in New York on April 15.

Jane Holloran, though listed as a stenographer in the American Releasing exchange in Albany, is showing her ability along sales lines these days. While the manager has been out on several occasions, Miss Holloran has put across some good sales.

F. S. Hopkins and Harry Bernstein of Universal copped out some nice business in Glenn Falls last week.

Buffalo

Manager Harry Bernstein of Universal and Mrs. Bernstein celebrated their wedding anniversary with a trip to New York City, where they were the guests of Mrs. Bernstein's parents. Charlie Goodwin has returned to the job following an attack of ptomaine poisoning. William Bourke, the genial booker at Universal, has purchased a new coupe. These "U" boys are sure having a hard time, it seems.

Robert Smeltzer, Pathe district manager, left town last Thursday evening after hearing all the new stories from Branch Manager W. A. V. Mack.

Harry E. Lotz, Select manager, crossed the hot sands last Friday night when he became a full fledged member of Ismalia Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at the Teck Theatre ceremonial. It sure was a hot night for Harry.

Harry Buxbaum is coming to Buffalo on "FRIDAY, THE 13TH," for a sales conference with Branch Manager Allan S. Moritz and his Paramount salesmen. The boys can't understand why Harry picked such a date.

Miss Margaret Henderson has succeeded D. Glasstone as biller at the Fox exchange. Esther Morris is one of the new stenogs and Miss Finkelstein another.

HOW ONE MANAGER IN INDIANA COVERED A BALD SPOT

This central opening in the Paramount Theatre, Logansport, Ind., is apparently not an entrance. It is for The Voice from the Minaret and was masked in with a special board carrying a portrait of the star and two of the stills.

Snell's Style Show Is Local Sensation

When he planned his Spring fashion show, A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., tied the Business Women's Club to the stunt by promising a portion of the receipts to the tuberculosis camp. They, in turn, tied the Journal to the proposition, and the event ceased to be a theatrical attraction and became a civic enterprise in which all were interested.

Mr. Snell very properly figured that advertising meant more than immediate receipts, and laying off a portion of the takings to a real charity would still leave him better off than on the usual business and yet give him a goodwill credit worth real money.

Stone Age Artists Painted This Sign

Jim Clancy, of the Princess Theatre, Hartford, Conn., believes in letting people know what attraction he has, and he does not care if the exploitation gets a bit noisy and attracts a crowd to the front of his house.

When he talked over Adam's Rib with Russell Moon, Paramounteer, they evolved the idea of using the old "lady sign painter" stunt, with a couple of cavemen to wield the brush. Bosco suits were hired for a couple of house employees, they were provided with plenty of black paint and told to go to it.

The sight of a couple of wild men of Borneo working on the front very naturally got attention from the pedestrians, and to hold the interest of the gallery the painters worked the sign in sections, blocking in the stuff as shown in one of the two illustrations, and taking their own time to do it, then swiftly completing the design as shown in the second illustration. The stunt worked so well that it was repeated the second day, and encored for a third.

In this connection it might be well to remember that you can get the white paper from the newspaper. They do not completely use up the paper on the rollers used in webb presses, and this is regarded as waste, so you can buy it very cheaply.

This is inexpensive exploitation, but if you pick the right location you can make it interest a large section of the populace.

Jackie's In Too

Jackie Coogan was made a member of the Junior Naval Reserve during his recent visit to Chicago.

Wesley Barry skimmed the cream off this stunt a couple of years ago, but there is still enough left for Jackie. If you have a J. N. R. in your town, get after them when you play the youngster.

Eddie Overlooked One Good Feature

Following his custom on other big Goldwyn productions, Eddie Bonns has issued a special exploitation suggestion folder on Mad Love, carrying the New York press notices, and a number of stunt suggestions, including the capital one of using a Chaplin reissue and advertising "Pola Negri in Mad Love with Charlie Chaplin in a Dog's Life," or whatever the title may be.

But even Eddie Bonns cannot think of everything, and while he suggests a red-mouth imprint to convey the suggestion of Pola's fervid kisses, he overlooks the lobby ballyhoo value of prices to the girls whose mouth impressions most closely resemble the imprint of the famous star's.

If you can visualize the ballyhoo possibilities of half the girls in town applying the lipstick and then fervently kissing a blank card, you will hasten to remedy his oversight.

It is just a revamp of the Priscilla Dean thumb-print stunt, but it is more pisturesque and can be capitalized for a lot of extra ticket sales. Provide blank cards (plain 3/5 card catalogue cards will do), with a rubber-stamped back for name and address and telephone number.

Have this outfit in the lobby just before the matinees and just before the first and second night shows, and you'll draw the crowd. Some of them will buy tickets who did not intend to. You've got them right up against the box office.

Better work it the previous week, when it may help some weaker title.

Worked Three

When he hit Rockford, Ill., Bill Danziger planted three press stories for Racing Hearts, one with a follow up. This was an alleged interview with Agnes Ayres in which she said that women did not drive autos as well as men. Then the paper had its own staff men interview prominent women drivers who at least inferentially called Miss Ayres an awful liar.

The second stunt was to give a matinee for the blind at which forty school teachers whispered the story of the play to as many sightless persons. It was good for a three column spread in the papers, and it did not bother the blind folks much. Bill probably handed them something besides tickets.

The third was a crib of Henry Ford's recent remarks on alcohol driven cars attributed to the racing driver in the play. It was not as good as the others, but it helped to interest automobilists, and it brought them to the Palm Theatre.

CAVE MEN REPLACE "LADY" SIGN PAINTERS ON A DISPLAY FOR ADAM'S RIB

The Princess Theatre, Hartford, Conn., pasted white sheets on the stand above the house, gave wild men costumes to two house employees and told them to paint a sign. By doing it in sections, as shown in the left hand cut, it was some time before the thing made sense, and meanwhile hundreds of persons stood around and watched, and those who could not wait came back later to see what it was all about. The completed sign is shown on the right.

Sold Racing Hearts With Cutout Sign

Because he could not follow the schemes outlined by the exploitation department of Southern Enterprises on Racing Hearts, Frank H. Burns, of the Grand Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., followed his own plans and sold the story to exceptional business for this time of the year—just as the hot weather is starting in.

The fire laws prevent any built-up displays along the lines of a racing scene for lobby work, so that was out of the question. Any display must be hung, so Mr. Burns made some large compoboard hearts for the lobby signs. The novelty was not in the use of hearts, but in the use of innumerable small pasteboard hearts hung above the signs to blend in and make a bigger smash. The compoboard hearts ran up to five feet wide. The pasteboards dropped down to a few inches.

Then he made up a throwaway from a four-column plan book cut and put one into every house, explaining that most of the regular residents can be more surely reached by this means than any other. They do not go downtown to see a show. They must be sold on some specific attraction before they lock up the house. Four thousand throwaways sold most of the town, and it knocked the business of the other theatres.

A Goldwyn Release

THIS PAINTING HELPED SELL 200 COPIES OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Bill Robson, Goldwynner, put this in a Baltimore department store when the picture was playing the Rivoli, and the sales of the photoplay edition went over the top in a very few days, besides calling attention to other picture title books.

Accessories Racer for Racing Hearts

W. E. Drumbar, manager of theatres for Southern Enterprises in Knoxville, Tenn., and local manager Brooks devised a clever lobby stunt for Racing Hearts.

They persuaded a local Ford agent to construct a miniature racing car from spare parts and offered prizes for the best estimate of the cost of the construction. As most Ford owners know the prices backward, they did not have to get a catalogue, but the catalogues were free for the asking and the estimate blanks were tied to the machine. You could use your own judgment or a pencil and paper.

When you got through you knew a lot about prices even if you did not get a prize, and it helped both house and agent, which is the consummation to be achieved if a stunt is to go over properly.

Winged Passes

Because he could hire an airplane at little cost, Albert B. Hill, of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, sent him up with the bottom of the wings lettered for Racing Hearts. From time to time small parachutes to which passes were attached, were dropped from the plane, and now and then a bundle of heralds would be thrown overboard.

For his lobby display he used a booth in which a number of hearts were revolved about a central pillar in which a kewpie stood in a sort of judge's stand. The hearts did not race, but they carried out the general idea.

A prize contest was run, the contestants being required to give an estimate of the picture from the press work. This made them read the press stories.

You can shut down this summer and take it easy or you can go out and fight for business and get it. If you feel you need a vacation, close. If you don't get out last summer's issue of this department.

Made a Winner

Because he had it so late in the run, Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., was able to take his choice of the innumerable lobby ideas on Smilin' Through.

He naturally picked the gate idea, but he worked it in a new form. His wall had three pillared openings. On either side were the entrance and exits, but the middle arch was provided with a double gate, held partly ajar by a cutout of Norma Talmadge. Over the arch was written: "Come Smilin' Through the Gates of Gladness." Ferns and potted plants disposed along the bottom of the wall gave a cyclorama effect to the structure, which was so effective that it aided in putting business away above the average and this on an old picture just at the time when the first warm spells usually cut business down in the South.

Mr. White is more than locally famous for his lobby work, but this was one of his best achievements.

THIS CAR IS BUILT FROM SPARE FORD PARTS

It supplied the lobby display for the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn. Prizes were given those making the most accurate estimates as to the cost of the various parts, making for interest in the dealer's stock as well as selling "Racing Hearts" to the theatre's clientele. Fine for Ford owners.

On Short Notice

Edgar Brown, of the Garden Theatre, Pottsville, Pa., had a switch in his bookings and found that he had just twenty-four hours in which to sell Nobody's Money.

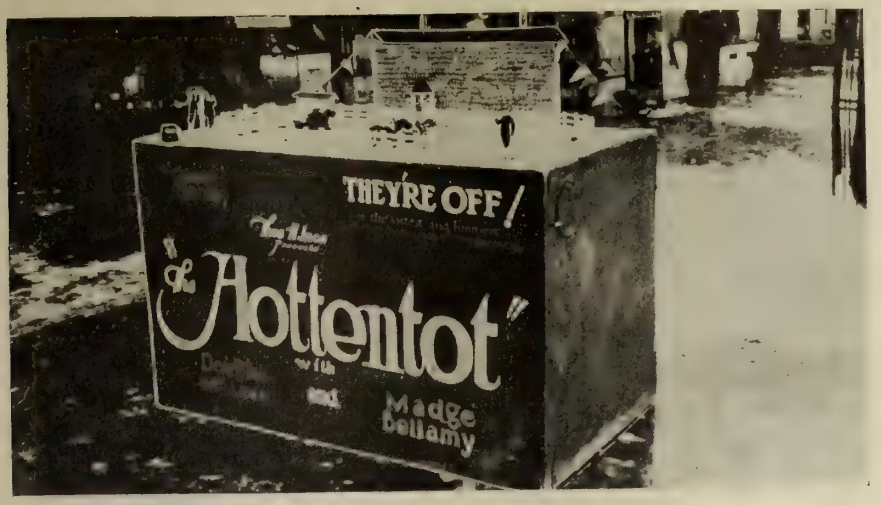
He consulted with Paramounteer Vernon Grey, who took Brown's rainy day automobile, painted the windows, put water color dollar marks all over the body and decorated with eight money bags borrowed from the bank. They used two gallons of gas to push the car around town, and the paint cost ten or fifteen cents. For that small investment they told the entire town, and business was good.

Built to Fit

Probably Rupert Hughes had no thought of the fashion show when he wrote Look Your Best, but Eddie Carrier, Goldwynner, in Toledo, let out a yelp of joy when he read the title and promptly organized a style show for the Pantheon Theatre.

Just before Easter, too.

It just pulled them in, and a double-truck ad by the store in co-operation did not hurt business in the least; not in the least.



A First National Release

THIS HOTTENTOT RACE WAS RUN OUT ON THE SIDEWALK

The Franklin Theatre, New York, a Moss Theatre, mounted cutout horses to the tops of a toy train of cars. The cars ran on a track below the stand and the horses apparently ran on the level, which is unusual in racing. It stood on the sidewalk.

Texas Style Show Heavy Production

Just an ordinary style show will pack them in, but when the show is dolled up a bit it is apt to bulge the walls. The Palace Theatre, Dallas, Tex., put on one the other day which cost nothing and made a lot of money.

A large local concern was hooked to the idea of giving a spring show in conjunction with My American Wife. An allegorical opening was written in which Juno, Minerva and Venus approach Paris for the Golden Apple. Juno promised power and riches and Minerva glory and renown, but Venus promised the snappiest chickens Dallas could offer in the line of dressed poultry. And after all that one of the models in the show got the apple instead of Venus, which served her right for resorting to bribery.

Eight girls were used, and as the costumes were lectured the spiel was sent out by radio, having been widely advertised in the papers for a considerable radius. This did not directly help the business, for the towns were too far away to draw much from, but it did pull some women into town, at that, and, of course, they came to see the show, too.

The store stood all of the expense of advertising and production and was well pleased with the financial results of the increased sales following the show. It more than got the profit on the investment in addition to a valuable general advertisement, and the Palace salted down more money than the cashiers were used to handling.

Bill Johnson is broadcasting the news to the rest of the circuit, with the admonition to pull something along the same lines.

Covered This Wagon at Top and Bottom

Each new attraction to open at the Criterion Theatre, New York, seems to go in for a larger sign than the preceding visitor, but the memories of the Salome sign and the glories of the Othello announcement are paled by the display for The Covered Wagon.

This sign is 60 by 34 feet, painted and cut out above the waterline. The wagon carries the title in letters nine feet high, each letter using a double row of 50-watt daylight lamps, an average of 75 lamps to a letter. The wagon stands 24 feet above the water.

On the marquise you can see a battery of six stereopticons, each of 2,000-watt power, each using a wheel-water effect which combine to give the effect of a slowly moving flow past the wagon. The inset is the "A Paramount Picture," the sign being so arranged that at night the letters seem to stand out through the water.

On the side street end is a modest little affair only 30 by 34 feet. This shows the front of the wagon, with letters five feet high and running around 45 lamps each. This is otherwise lighted by 12 500-watt floods, half above and the rest below the painting.

The front is not only one of the largest but one of the most artistic signs ever put out for an amusement attraction of any sort, and by virture of its location it gets a wonderful play, for most of the traffic on Broadway at theatre hours must pass the sign on its way to the other houses, and the day traffic is largely down the opposite side of the street, where the sign shows up best.

A Paramount Release

THIS IS THE LATEST ADDITION TO BROADWAY SIGNS

Standing on the corner of Broadway and Forty-third street, atop the marquise of the Criterion Theatre, it makes a terrific smash. The sign is 60 by 34 feet and the wagon is 24 feet high, the title letters being nine feet high. It is a wow.

Not for Him

Jack Hellman was bounced out of a town in Minnesota for trying to exploit Manslaughter. The manager did not want the extra crowds that exploitation would draw.

He figured that he could sell his 400 seats without the aid of exploitation. If he got more persons down to the theatre, his opposition would get the overflow. He was not working for the opposition, so he told Hellman to be on his way.

Pretty soft for this exhibitor.

Measured Standout

Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, persuaded Frank Fisher, of the La Salle Theatre, La Salle, Ill., to count his chickens before they were hatched, but it helped to hatch the chicks.

They whitewashed a strip two feet wide along the pavement to a point 200 feet below the house and then lettered it with the announcement that the waiting line to see Kick In would extend that far.

They based the prognostication on the press work they had done by means of a special newspaper story in which Chick Hewes (who is the chief character in Kick In) complained that the police would not let him go straight. Then the chief denied persecution, making a second day story.

It's a good stunt, but for the luvamike fix it with the Chief before you spring it.

Better Than Marks

Here is one Amike Vogel pulled on the money heralds for Nobody's Money. He scattered them all over Erie, Pa., and then announced that ten bills would be good for one ticket to the Columbia theatre to see the play. Only fifty tickets were issued, but around a thousand small boys tried to work the matinees on anywhere from one to nine.

Even the man who is not willing to go to the trouble of getting nine more bills attaches some value to the message when he finds that others want his herald. That is where the punch comes into the stunt. It is not the people who come in on the passes, but the people who read what others are asking for and then pay regular money.

Miniature Wagons to Help Book Sales

A couple of barrel hoops, a few yards of cloth and a borrowed express wagon will give a fine display for The Covered Wagon in the book department or the window of department stores.

The book department of Marshall Field gave an entire counter to the display of the Grosset & Dunlap edition of the book, and Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, contributed a lot of stills to help doll things up.

A Paramount Release

THE MARSHALL FIELD DISPLAY

This stunt is so simple and inexpensive that even the small stores can work it, and in many instances the small stores handle a line of toys as well as books and will have the material at hand. If there is no space for so large a wagon use smaller ones, but more of them, and let them ramble over the counter along a roadway of books.

Classy Mail

Invitations in very close simulation of copper-plate work were sent out to the mailing list of Keith's Eighty-first Street Theatre when The Christian was played at that house. The text was all on the first page of a four-page sheet, folded once to go into a square envelope, and it fairly breathed class.

It announced the picture and the prologue and added the suggestion that seat reservations be made early, sewing up the definite idea of attending on a certain night instead of the indeterminate "some time."

For the prologue Edward Lewis, the manager, followed the one used at the Capitol.

One Did—One Didn't

Max Greenberg, of the Livonia Theatre, Brooklyn, tied up to Public School 109 on Remembrance and ran the picture for two weeks, with a profit of $600 from the school tie-up in a 600-seat house.

The school is one of the largest in the world, with a list of 5,600 pupils, and Mr. Greenberg got practically all of them, in sections. To make things interesting, he took local pictures of the classes on their way to the theatre and of the school activities.

On the other hand, the manager of the Halsey Theatre booted a tie-up with P. A. 85, which promised to net him about $100 for a single morning performance, plus the word of mouth advertising he could get. His explanation was that he was paying so large a rental for Robin Hood that he could not afford to sell tickets for ten cents and then split 50-50 with the school fund.

So long as this was an extra performance, it is difficult to see what bearing the rental had on the price of tickets, but he lost a chance to put one or more pluggers into about 1,500 families, to say nothing of the loss of the goodwill of a junior high school with more than 2,000 pupils.

Hits Antipodes

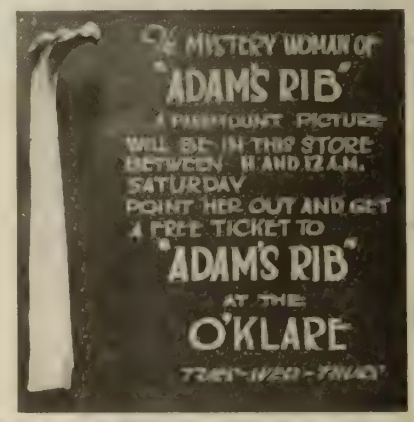
Now Australia is suffering from it.

Albert Dean, of the Paramount office in Sydney, sold the safety first idea to the Mayor and the Safety First Association through a pre-showing of Manslaughter, and they pushed it clear over the top. First thing we know they'll be slowing down the 'rickshaws in China and the camels in the Sahara.

Biblical Teasers Helped Adam's Rib

We knew that someone would hook the butcher shops to Adam's Rib. One of the first was H. A. Schwann, of the O'Klare Theatre, Eau Claire, Wis. He tied the butcher to some Adam's Rib Roast advertising, and then hooked the restaurants to the announcement that they were serving them, which gave a lot of windows.

A raffles stunt was used, the mystery woman being supposed to be Adam's rib, and all the stores she visited used a card similar to that shown here.



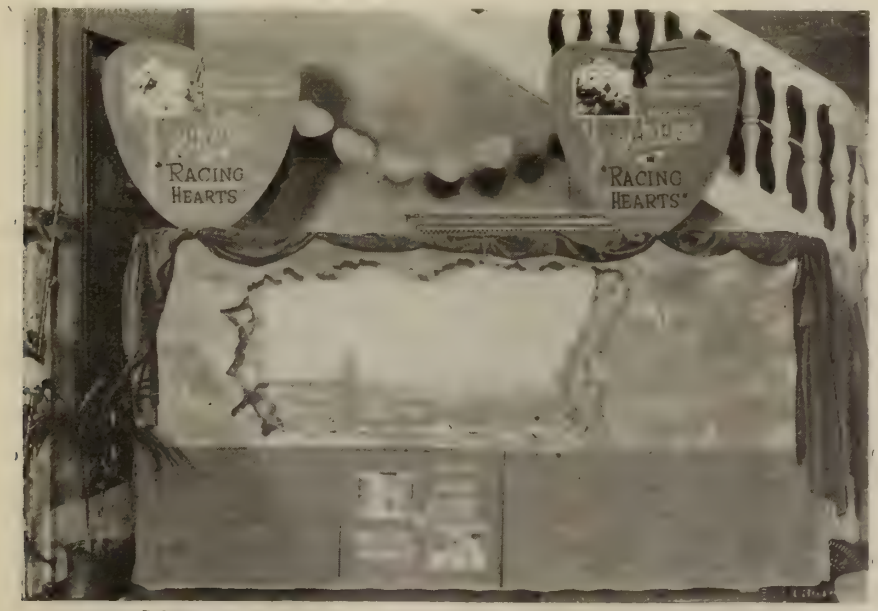
A Paramount Release

THE RAFFLES CARD

Five days before the opening teaser ads set in 14 point italic were run all through the paper asking the reader to "turn to Genesis 2:xxii to read about the most famous bone in history." Next day the same spaces carried the verse and the third day it was announced that the rib would be on exhibition in Eau Claire.

We think that merely the reference in 36 point bold would have been better for the first day.

Just in passing, it would seem that there is a chance for "My worst 'bone,'" symposium in this title.



A Paramount Release

SAME OLD FOYER, BUT ANOTHER NEW IDEA IN MEMPHIS

A. B. Morrison makes a display every week in Loew's Palace, but he makes them so different that the patrons come around just to see what he is doing this week. The display for "Racing Hearts" had animated cars.

Before and After in Pickwick Lobby

Richard A. Addison, of the Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, Cal., hooked the U. S. Forest Service and the San Diego Natural History Museum to the showing of Metro's Heart's Aflame.

From the former he obtained trees to set up a double lobby display. One side showed the forest as it should be. The other had a painted backing and light effects to suggest a forest fire with the engine rushing through the flames. That, of course, hooked to the conservation angle, which was why the Service gave him the trees and detailed a ranger to go with him and see that he got just what he wanted.

The museum supplied the stuffed animals which were supposed to be fleeing from the flames and which added greatly to the spectacular effect. Both were given ample credit on lobby cards.

Both co-operators worked the newspapers for special stories in which the Pickwick and the play had to be mentioned, and the Forest Service also gave a number of booklets on the Cleveland Forest to be presented the patrons. As this booklet contained a fine autmobile map of the section, they were much sought after.

It was clean work and quite up to Mr. Addison's standard.

Has Everything That Goes For a Sure-Fire Box Office Number and Then Some David Smith Prod.

"MASTERS OF MEN"
Vitagraph

DIRECTOR ..... David Smith
AUTHOR ..... Morgan Robertson
SCENARIO BY .....C. Graham Baker
CAMERAMAN ..... Steve Smith, Jr.
AS A WHOLE.....Fine live entertainment with punch in its action, sure-fire patriotic atmosphere and all that goes for a good picture
STORY.....A romance of the Spanish War period with action, thrills and plenty of genuine audience appeal
DIRECTION.....Splendid; succeeds in making story realistic and atmosphere is great; development very good
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Very good
PLAYERS.....Cullen Landis at his best in role that he handles in fine style; Alice Calhoun and Wanda Hawley attractive maids of '98 and Earle Williams suitable; others all good types
EXTERIORS ..... Good
INTERIORS ..... Good
DETAIL ..... First rate
CHARACTER OF STORY.....A character development showing the rise of an American lad from boyhood to manhood
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,800 feet

Here is one with a genuine wallop for American audiences and if the patriotic atmosphere in this doesn't send them out with their blood tingling and their fervor for the stars and stripes increased a hundred fold, then the guess is all wrong. "Masters of Men," David Smith's production of Morgan Robertson's novel, is an out and out American picture for Americans and it contains an unlimited supply of real audience appeal—the sort that starts them talking about the picture and brings others in.

Much of the credit for the success of the picture belongs to Director Smith for the very worth while and capable way in which he has handled the material and to C. Graham Baker, who prepared the scenario. Added to this there is the splendid performance of Cullen Landis in the role of a sailor of the U. S. Navy, as well as a uniformly well suited and capable cast.

To start with, Morgan Robertson's novel contains splendid material for the screen and in retaining the author's method of development, Baker has gotten the most out of it and Director Smith has been able to tell the story smoothly, consistently and cover the ground in much less footage than he might were he to proceed in the usual fashion. This chapter style of telling the story is wholly pleasing and satisfying and eliminates considerable unnecessary detail. And at the same time the sequences dove-tail nicely and there are no gaps in the continuity.

The first two chapters are concerned with the early boyhood of the hero and his subsequent entrance into the Navy followed by the entrance of the United States into war with Spain. This leads up to some mighty fine business and includes a variety of thrills and action with sure-fire punch. It all registers and is flavored with such definite patriotic atmosphere that it is even more impressive than ordinarily. It is distinctly the treatment given the story and the wealth of realism and excellent detail that makes the piece absorbing. For a climax you have the destruction of the famous battleship Maine and the fight in Santiago Harbor.

Cullen Landis works like a real trooper and his portrayal in this is easily one of the best things he has ever done. They are going to get a real thrill out of his many scraps. Alice Calhoun and Wanda Hawley are both charming in their '98 costumes. Picture patrons all over will "love" the romance of Alice Calhoun and Landis, and Wanda Hawley and Earle Williams. Director Smith had fine cooperation from the whole company.

Story: Dick Halpin is accused of theft by the brother of Mabel Arthur, whom he loves. To save Mabel from humiliation Dick accepts the blame, runs away and joins the U. S. Navy. It isn't until Dick and his lieutenant, Breen, have been shanghaied aboard a sailing vessel, that Dick learns Mabel knows the truth, but before there can be a reconciliation Dick and Breen return to their ship and are pitched into active service at Santiago Harbor. Dick is transferred to work under young Arthur, now an ensign, and is with him when he dies. After it is all over Dick and Breen return to the home town, Dick to claim Mabel, and Breen to claim Bessie, Mabel's chum.

Better Get Your Order In and Then Get to Work On It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Vitagraph's latest production looks like a sure thing for the box office. It has all the requisites of a box office attraction and they are all fully satisfying from an audience viewpoint. "Masters of Men" has been done in a big way and should do a big business. You can safely make promises for it and rest assured your crowd will vote it a winner, unless, of course, you happen to be catering to a foreign clientele. In that case they may not be carried away with the spirit of enthusiasm that the picture is almost certain to create with American audiences.

There is a trailer available which you would do well to secure and use well in advance of the showing. Be sure and tell them of the historic episode and of the blowing up of the battleship Maine. There will be those of your patrons to whom the incident will still be current history and they'll be especially interested. Tell them about the excellent work of Cullen Landis, of the action and thrills. The picture really deserves your best exploitation efforts with the receipts proving it well worth your while. You have something to talk about. Do it.

HOW RALPH THAYER GOT A JOB WITH THE PARAMOUNT

He bannered his car for "The Covered Wagon," got Claud Saunders to take a look at it, and was sent to Cincinnati. The chances are that the next man to try the stunt will be told to go to an entirely different place, but it worked for Thayer.

How to Obtain a Job with Claud Saunders

History repeats itself. Ralph Thayer, formerly manager of the Century Theatre, Baltimore, and more recently of the Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls, decided to get a position where water was not so constantly thrust upon him. He decided that he would like to be a Paramounteer, and perhaps he remembered how Al Boasberg hooked a similar position.

Anyhow he rolled into New York in his own automobile, parked in front of the Paramount offices and coaxed Claud Saunders to come down and see it. On both sides and the rear were cloth signs reading "I'm going to find the covered wagon or bust. Sheriff Thayer."

Thayer is tooling the car—still bannered—out to Cincinnati where he will do plain and fancy Paramounting for a time. Three things are required to get a job with Saunders: a car, a banner and Saunders. The first two are easier to get than the third.

Floppy Book Sale but Picture Sold

E. D. Keilmann, of the Grand Theatre, Topeka, Kan., wants to know what's the matter with book sales.

He planned to include a book sale on The Flirt along with his other advertising. The book store manager was not exactly optimistic. He had sold very few books on any previous hook-ups, and did not want to lay in a stock of The Flirt. He was willing, however, to give it another whirl, so Mr. Keilmann rustled a couple of dozen copies on consignment and got a lot of extra jackets, making a big splash in the window. He also gave a ticket with each book sold, and advertised the sale in his display advertising.

He believes that the display helped him, along with the rest of his campaign, for he sold the Universal-Jewel to a fancy business, but only seven copies of the book sold, showing a profit of $1.40. He is afraid he will be out on the next window he wants, and asks what the trouble is.

The trouble seems to be more with the population than the idea. We know of other towns where the sales have been in excess of a hundred copies, and the towns were smaller than Topeka. But that brings no cheer, of course, to Mr. Keilmann.

He got his, but he knows that he must get something for the book dealer. He seems to have overlooked the fact that probably other books were sold through this display. He also overlooks the fact that often a good picture will not sell books until after the run. People get thinking over the picture and then want the book—and get it. We think that perhaps Mr. Keilmann held his post-mortem while the corpse was still warm. What has been your experience with the books? Shoot in the testimony.

Meaty Stunt

John McConville, the Boston Paramounteer, shoots in a photograph of the artist's sketch for a lobby frame used by the Palace Theatre, Lawrence, Mass.

The title, Adam's Rib, is painted large at the top, with a "now playing" just below. The stars are named under that, with the announcement that it is a Paramount picture and the date to close.

Alongside the "now playing" is a real rib from the butcher shop, and this is what got a lot of attention, the supposition being that it was Adam's rib and not the butcher's. Now watch the Palace hook up a drug store when it plays Bella Donna.

Stayed Three Weeks

When a picture can stay in a town the size of Bridgeport, Conn., for three weeks it means that some one is on the job. In this instance it was Edward D. Turner, the house manager. He started in with an old-time apology for the number of persons turned away from the Capitol Theatre the opening night.

He followed this with a screamer threatening with prosecution any person advertising that The Christian would be shown at any other theatre than his own.

It does not appear that any other house wanted to do this, but the moral effect was to bring them in in droves.

How long has it been since YOU sent in a stunt?
Why?

Two Capital Ideas on the Lak a Rose

Julius K. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, worked a press stunt that no one need be ashamed of for Mighty Lak a Rose.

The day after the opening a charming girl visited the city hospitals and gave out roses to the patients. She refused to give her name in asking permission to go through the wards. When she repeated her visit the next day someone telephoned the papers and the reporters swooped down. She still refused to give her name, but told that she had seen the play at the Rialto and it had impressed her so strongly that she wanted to do some good.

Pleased the Papers

The story was played up by all the papers and had a perceptible effect on the business. It's good if you work it carefully and hide the press angle—unless you are so friendly with the editors that they will plug it along for you.

The other stunt was a fiddle contest on Thursday, the sickest night. Any violin player over fifty years of age could compete, the sole requirement being that he play an old favorite other than the composition from which the play took title. It brought about $600 excess business for a Thursday night.

HERE IS A NEW IDEA IN DECORATING AUTO PERAMBULATORS

It was worked by the Garden Theatre, Des Moines, on "Racing Hearts," the car being sent out at the head of a parade during the noon hour each day of the run. It is not highly important, but that is Manager Dan Burgum alongside.

Pins a Large Rose on White Flower Lithos

Describing his campaign on The White Flower, Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., writes: "What we did on this picture was merely to take advantage of the best paper Paramount has put out in many a day."

As the cut shows, he used the three sheets, without lettering, for his corner boards, and took a cutout from the six as a basis for a painted display in the centre, which was extended to the side walls at the top. On the marquise he placed the cutout from the 24-sheet, apparently coasting out toward the gutter. The banner seems to have been fabricated from the same twenty-four.

Because the paper was flashy, he gave a pre-showing to the Better Films Committee, which pronounced it "beautiful," which fact was properly played up. He stressed the fact that this picture was really made in Hawaii, and then he sat back and counted a lot more money than he usually handles. The White Flower seems to be making an unexpectedly large clean-up in Southern Enterprises territory.

First National Has New One Sheet Style

Every little while some long-felt want gets filled, and the latest to plug a gap is the First National, which is now issuing pictorial half sheets for window and lobby work. Samples are shown on this page for several coming releases.

Not only will these work in well in the lobby where a wider sheet cannot be used, but they will find their way into windows where a one is regarded as being too pronounced.

From another angle they can be used on large sheets of compo board, painted and lettered, the surplus surface being permanently painted or changed weekly, as desired. If a weekly change is wished, the foundation can be done with oil paint and the lettering put on with water color, which can be washed off to give place to new text.

These half sheets provide the managers with a new and useful accessory, and should find a warm welcome.

It's Worth a Fiver to Draw a Dinosaur

One of the stunts worked by Harry Watts, of the Strand Theatre, Omaha, was to offer prizes of $5, $3 and $2 for the best copies of a picture of a dinosaur published in a three-column cut in the story which broke the contest. The picture had to be colored and 200 children used up more than $10 worth of paper and crayons in their efforts to get the five-spot.

The story was printed in four instalments, and they had an Adam's Rib Society, which was not so novel after the other 98 styles of societies. A flapper Raffles who carried a check for $50 was a better idea and they sold a soft drink maker on the idea of an Adam's Rib Ale. You put it on ice for two hours, drink it, then went to see the picture for the kick.

A laundry used stuffers for four weeks, contrasting their methods with the old custom of beating the fig leaves on a rock to get them clean, and they made a special display of stills and paintings in a gallery in the public library which got the interest of all the newspapers.

Watts is out for one of those Adam's Rib gowns.

Still Smiling

Although it is no longer young, there is still a pull to Smilin' Through, and it brought an 80 per cent. increase to W. A. Byers, of the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C., recently.

He started two weeks in advance and worked up to a climax with pasters on every third telephone pole all over town. No one could escape the title and apparently very few wished to.

Kid Matinee Is Now Called Family Night

Responding to the suggestion of the local Better Films Committee, Roy L. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., has established Monday as a family night, when especial pains are taken to have a picture for the entire family.

Because of the co-operation of the committee, he was able to tie the local paper to the idea as sponsor, and for the week prior to the first of these nights the paper ran a story daily with a coupon good for one admission. On the Friday before the second Monday a letter was sent to all who had attended the first program thanking them for their co-operation and reminding them that this was to be a permanent feature, stating the second program and playing up the advantages of knowing that Monday was always a good time to bring the whole family.

The response to the idea has been so good that other houses in Southern Enterprises are taking up the scheme and announcing their own nights.

Where possible Friday will be better than Monday, since this causes less interference with the school work.

If you try the scheme, try and get some betterment society to stand behind the idea. It will help to put it over.

SPECIAL PAINTINGS MADE A FLASH FOR "ADAM'S RIB"

This was the display of the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, on the De Mille production. The large paintings on either side and the smaller one above contrasted the stone age stuff with the modern society of the main story. Costly but effective.

Sold the Matinee to Grub Purveyor

Possibly Norman Dixon, Paramounteer, never heard of Bamberger's free pass stunts. Perhaps, on the other hand, he wanted to be different. Anyhow here's the plot of the story:

There was a new cafeteria about to open in Peoria, Ill. Fred McMullen, of Ascher's Palace Theatre, had Adam and Eva. Dixon sold the cafeteria proprietors 3,500 matinee tickets to be given as souvenirs at the opening. Some 3,100 were presented. Many of these brought a paid admission, and the restaurant was given only a 10% reduction, so the house not only had the cash but all the advantage of the window and newspaper advertising of the new enterprise.

If you work a scheme of this sort, you can land it on the cooperator more easily if you provide a special form of ticket and collect only for those presented at the door. The merchant uses some back stamp to validate the tickets he gives out, and to check the theatre from ringing in a lot of extra tickets. This gives a good working basis and will land results where a straight purchase will not appeal to the other side.

The White Flower Gave Big Results

The White Flower was something of an ugly duckling at the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville. It was moved from the Sunday-Wednesday position to the last half because it was felt that another picture would yield better results. It went over to a nightly standout and the Saturday business beat the Sunday picture by a hundred and a quarter; though Sunday is the big day in Jax., and it beat the usual regular price business on any three day run.

Mostly it was the posters, according to Guy Kenimer. They liked these and they packed the lobby from 7:45 to 9 o'clock every night. The moral is to order extra posters

Got It Free

Wilfrid Le Doux, manager of the Empress Theatre, Omaha, recently read Ernie Shipman's advertisement about the millions of dollars worth of publicity Tutankhamen had acquired without cost. He did not wait for the excavation pictures. He piled out and hired The Loves of Pharaoh and renamed the old man, advertising it in the lobby. It proved what Shipman said, so you can imagine what the authentic pictures are going to do for the box office.

Bill Folds Now

Al Birch used the money herald stunt on Nobody's Money, as recently reported from Salt Lake, but instead of buying purses at three cents each he made bill folds of pasteboard and the stunt cost the Princess Theatre, Denver, only $10 instead of $15.

Now here's another. Get window envelopes and stick the bills in so they will show through the window. Even more deceptive and just as plausible.

Better start thinking about this Summer's businses.

The right kind of exploitation will bring the crowds to you all seasons of the year.

Start now.

Blew Up Business and the Balloons

Perhaps you think it does not take much of a tug to get an automobile up on the sidewalk, but Major I. C. Holloway, of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga., found that it took an awful pull. The Major had to help before he could lift a Durant car out of the gutter and onto the walk to advertise Racing Hearts in front of the theatre, but it got so much attention it was worth the trouble it cost.

The Durant dealer took about 200 inches in special advertising to tell that the Durant was used in the racing scenes and that Jimmy Murphy made his mark in that car, and he loaned a couple of bannered cars as well as the one used in the sidewalk display.

Major Holloway used cutout letters three feet high for Roberts, Miss Ayers and the title, putting Roberts first, and he stamped a lot of toy balloons for the attraction and gave them to a man who paraded the streets, handing out one to a child now and then.

Several hundred children followed him in the hope of getting one of the toys and it made a fine ballyhoo. Also it helped to bring a 35% increase in the business.

Ten Minute Sermon Saves Sunday Show

Because the Holier Thans were getting nervous about Sunday shows in Sandusky, Ohio, George F. Seitz, of the Star Theatre, put a monkey wrench in the prevention mechanism.

He persuaded his own pastor to give a ten minute sermon on To Have and to Hold, his current attraction, and the stunt got so much attention that Seitz is trying to make it a permanency.

The story does not tell whether the minister closed the church or just dropped over while they were singing a hymn in the regular service, but he spoke to many more persons in the theatre than he could possibly get in the church, and put all the kick of a longer discourse into the breezy ten minute talk.

No one can do a little advertising and say it does not pay any more than a person can expect a cure from a single dose of medicine.

A REAL HORSE SOLD "THE OLD HOMESTEAD" SECOND RUN

Bert Jordan, of the Princess Theatre, Memphis, put a stable in the lobby and even the newspapers sat up and took notice of the novelty, showing that livestock is still good where it has not been used before.

Blooms Boom Grumpy

Because the plot of Grumpy hinges upon a gardenia, Howard Price Kingsmore, the new manager of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, used paper gardenias, with a tag, to put the play over. The tags read: "Follow the trail of the white gardenia to the Howard Theatre to see Grumpy—grouchy, lovable, wise Grumpy, Theodore Roberts, solve the mystery of the white gardenia and the theft of the $400,000 Lawson diamond."

As the paper flowers were obtained at twenty cents a hundred, the cost was not great.

Paramounteer Oscar Kantner relayed the idea to Anniston, Ala., where the house will give a special matinee of The White Flower, the admission being one white gardenia. As these will later be used for the tag idea, they kill two titles with one stunt.

Dope Capsules

Albert L. Greene, publicity man for the Stone Theatre, Brooklyn, dug out the old capsule idea for The Drug Traffic, printing up a slip one and one-half by three inches and folding so that only the word "Dope" showed through the capsule.

To give emphasis to the idea he had these distributed by a man in black robe carrying a scythe and followed by a boy carrying a banner. Death carries the capsules in a wallet and handed them out to all who would take them, but many refused, saying that they did not use drugs, apparently taking the idea too literally.

Just to help along Greene had his ballyhoo throw a fake fit a couple of times, invariably gathering a crowd of several hundred.

"Dogged" the Voice

Figuring that perhaps the towners might not know what a Voice from the Minaret was, the Saenger Theatre, Shreveport, La., landed a dog story on the editor which was sponsored by a Persian rug dealer in the town who told all about the muezzin and the call to prayer from the minaret.

Even where people know that a muezzin is a human church bell and a minaret is the steeple of a Moslem mosque, it is possible to get their interest in the additional details of how often the call comes, what the muezzin cries and the names of the various periods of prayer, all of which can be obtained through your librarian and illustrated with a section of one of your advertisements.

THE LOBBY OF THE PALACE THEATRE, MEMPHIS, WAS NO PLACE FOR NERVES

A. B. Morrison, of the Loew house, made a huge Dinosaur for the foyer, which was removed to the marquise for the run of the picture. The prehistoric display was in the usual foyer corner and remained there during the engagement. To gain contrast the general lobby decoration reproduced the ball room scenes in "Adam's Rib" with crescents for Glimpses of the Moon. which followed in.

and somewhat ugly. Mr. Bair also sends in a couple of sprightly displays for Jazzmania. He says that one is from the Metro press book, but that tells nothing, since both are equally good, though we suspect Mr. Bair of being the author of the poetry in one display, which reads:

It's dazzling, it's cheerful,
An eyeful—an earful.
It's best to come early,
Just to be keerful.

We don't believe that Jack Meador would write that. Mr. Bair is keeping the State advertising up to the mark he set when he took the house, and it ranks high for a general average.

Double Signature Lacks Big Display

It is a novelty to be able to find fault with Roy Miller, of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, but in his display for The Christian we think that he sinks the house signatures too much. To cover the demand the picture was put in at both the California and Miller's, only a block apart, the latter house getting the overflow from the California. This fact is played up in rather small type where it really is the big selling point and more important than the top line. The top should have read, "Two theatres are required to fill the demand for seats" and should have run on with the two house names in not smaller than a 48 point, set side by side, with the address in ten point below. Then the reader would have realized that it was a big picture without being told. The display as it stands is full of type so placed that each line helps to kill the others. They are too nearly of a size; too nearly of equal importance in color. It would have been better to shoot the press notices and use that fifteen lines to white space the rest and bring the lines into greater prominence. Placed where they are the house names do not stand out in the least, and the loss of the familiar name plate confuses the regular reader who is looking for California advertisement. One name plate in either corner, not large, but isolated by white would have helped a great deal. Mr. Miller does such uniformly good work he is entitled to a slip now and then, and this seems to be due more to haste than to a lack of knowledge. But where two houses share an attraction, they should be given fully display, for the mere fact that two houses will be required will do much to bring in the crowds, particularly those who follow their fancy in picking their amusements. A lot of persons go to the California irrespective of the bill, but the "shoppers" will be impressed by the double booking and want to go where the crowd goes if they are sufficiently impressed by the fact of the booking.

A HALF PAGE FROM E. E. BAIR, OF UHRICHSVILLE, ON KNIGHTHOOD

Moving a Feature Is Cleverly Done

The Regent Theatre, Toronto, wanted to take over Robin Hood, following the first run, and it did not want the stigma of a second run, though why it should be a stigma is something we never could understand. At any rate they wanted to move Doug and to do it in the best way possible, so the Regent apologized on behalf of the Hippodrome for not being able to take care of all the spectators the earlier run and told how it had taken over the picture for an additional week that none might be disappointed. Beyond the panel at the bottom there is no selling talk. All of the selling was done by the Hippodrome and all the Regent had to do was to collect on this earlier advertising, which it has done very nicely in this rather large display, a six twelves. The printer did not do his share, for he has kept the "You still have a chance to see the" in too small a letter. This should have been put in at least an 18 point bold even at the cost of a smaller face for the text of the "apology" and this latter should have been set upper and lower, for easy reading, instead of the more difficult all capitals. It's pretty sloppy typographical work and the slant of the letters in the "you still have a chance" is unequal. It looks as though the mats for the straight and the italic of the face had become mixed. The artist trails in with a slashed letter for the title. Even the small towns have cut out that hick stuff, but the news does not seem to have reached Toronto yet. But here is a nice way to slide a feature from one house to another, and it will pay you to keep it in mind if you have a second run house—even if some other management has the first one. For that matter you can work the same idea if you bring the picture back some weeks later, provided that it is a big one. Don't say you are just getting a chance to run it at a price you can afford, but tell how you are bringing it back at the first opportunity to give those who were disappointed the first time a chance to see it.

Some men are natural born liars and can sell gold bricks or oil stock with conviction, but the average man sells best what he knows best.

Takes a Full Page With Column Reader

Taking a full page for The Storm, the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, lays off the left hand column in press stuff. Possibly that side column was a donation, but it looks more as though the house paid for it all and laid off part in readers. The copy is mostly well done, but the press comments do not impress very strongly. Some of them are a bit too perfunctory, though there is a wealth of good material to be had along these lines. The house slips a little on that right hand ear. The slogan under the signature reads "Where the best pictures are always shown first." And just to the right of that begins "Although this picture has played all the big cities of the United States and Canada—— at advanced prices, the Lyceum will show it at regular rates" and the slogan is even repeated in this text, though the fact that the picture has been previously shown "in all the big cities" might strike some Sherlock Holmes as giving the lie to the slogan. But the "regular prices" is probably what the average patron notices rather than the slogan.

Quiet Colors

Just because ht got Blood and Sand on a second run did not seem to Frank H. Burns, of the Grand Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., any good reason for keeping quiet.

He boxed in the lobby with compo board, painted it yellow, did the art work in red and black, then dressed the marquise in red and yellow bunting.

It made a noise like a boiler factory next door to a sawmill, but it brought in more business than any second run has a right to expect.

Line Sketches Help to Sell Doctor Jack

Next to the cartoon strip, this comedy layout seems to have been found most useful by those who are selling Dr. Jack, for it appears in a number of displays. The figure of the star looks more like Joe Reddy, his press agent, than it does like the star, but most theatregoers do not know Joe, so they will not notice this, and the sketches in the strip help put over the general idea of hilarity in large measure. The lines seem to have been taken from the press book as well as the cut, but they make a good combination and they sell to the limit. This particular display is from the Columbia Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, which also used the comic strip. This is about seven thirteens, rather larger than is needed to sell Lloyd, but it does not hurt to give him a little more than his share of the publicity when such good material is to be had. That was probably the big idea in supplying such attractive material in the large sizes. Managers are persuaded without argument to make large displays.

Made a Mortise to Set in Hand Work

The curse of hand lettering still lies upon Boston, or "again" should be used in place of "still," since for a little while the agents really used type. This display for The Town That Forgot God comes from Tremont Temple, which runs pictures when it is not housing revival meetings and similar religious affairs. Generally the Tremont does capital advertising, but it slips now and then on the ice of the all-hand design. In this particular space type in the mortise (which is a strong commendation of the play from one of the New York papers), would have been much better, and a mortise is so simple that it is difficult to understand why the slight additional cost was not incurred. There was a brief space when the Boston ads were set in type and the dramatic page looked like a real big-town paper, but the managers went straight back to the damnable hand work and Boston is once more giving Pittsburgh a hard run for first money.

Black Circle Can Still Get Effect

The black circle is an ancient device, but it never seems to lose its value, if the lettering is only large enough to stand out against the black, and the Century Theatre, Baltimore, gets the letters up to a size where you can read it the first look, instead of having to stick around and puzzle it out. It gives a highly effective display in a comparatively small space; a 125 by four, which is not extravagant as the Baltimore spaces go. The curtain and figure provide an interesting background which suggests rather than tells. It means nothing and yet the figure seems to offer possibilities of good entertainment and it gives the text announcement real aid, for no very good reason. You cannot tell just why you are favorably influenced by the cut. You merely know that it looks as though this might be a good play, and it supplements a good title. The Century almost always bats above the general average, but this goes above their own general mark.

Makes a Large Show With Only Two Cuts

E. E. Bair, of the New State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio, proves that it is possible to use nearly half a page without wasting most of the space on cuts. For When Knighthood Was in Flower he uses nearly ten inches across the page, but he employs only one portrait and one small scene cut. This does not take into account the small crest which gives a large distinction to the upper portion of the space. It is used to excellent advantage. That upper half is the seller by star and title. The lower portion builds up on that with selling talk. One of the points nicely put over is the announcement that because of the historical value of the play to school children all under twleve will be admitted at any show for only ten cents, though the matinee price is thirty and the evening price forty-five cents. In the same line the matinee is started at 4 o'clock on Wednesday, instead of at 2, for the benefit of the children, the performance being continuous on that day. About the only thing we do not like in the display is the formal division by means of two-point rule. The only rule work should have been around the price schedule. Elsewhere it is not called for, and it makes the display stiff

GREAT ALONE. (5,912 feet). Star, Monroe Salisbury. A fair picture. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MOHICAN'S DAUGHTER. (5,500 feet). Star cast. Very good program picture. Used six, three, one, lobby, slide. Had good attendance in bad weather. Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SHATTERED IDOLS. (5,850 feet). All star cast. I cannot praise this picture too highly. A real Special sold as a program picture to me. Book it and boost it, is my advice to you other exhibitors. Used six, three, one, slide, lobby, to fair attendance (Catholic neighborhood). Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,800 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A great picture. Pleased them all. The print we received was an outrage; rotten. Our first print did not show up; we had another rushed to us and it was in an awful shape. Used posters, slide, newspapers and window cards. Good attendance. Town of 4,500, drawing better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,800 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. If you can buy it within reason, do so. It relieves the monotony of features. Used three newspapers, heralds, window cards. Good attendance. Small town, drawing retired farmers and villagers. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,800 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. It is good, but not as good as "Sure Fire Flint" and scores of other comedy-dramas sold at half the price of "Grandma's Boy." Would not pay more than an ordinary Special picture value for it. Advertised by covering everything in the county. Attendance half house each show. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

REAL ADVENTURE. (5 reels). Star, Florence Vidor. Our second Vidor as a star. This was a very ordinary program picture. Used posters, slide, newspapers. Had poor attendance, drawing to better class. Why don't they put more light on their interior scenes? The full first reel was very dark. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

REAL ADVENTURE. (5 reels). Star, Florence Vidor. Worst yet; King Vidor directed it; very poor program picture; patrons still roasting me about it. Lay off. Used regular newspaper advertising. Had fair attendance. Town of 8,000; draw working element. Admission ten and thirty cents. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

TILL WE MEET AGAIN. (5,822 feet). Star, Mae Marsh. A knockout. Pleased a hundred per cent; was highly praised and many good comments were received. Big city; draw from church community. Admission 10-20. P. J. Del Grande, Jr., Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." That is the spirit that prompts sincere exhibitors to send the dependable booking tips you always find on these pages. UP IN THE AIR ABOUT MARY. (4,627 feet). Stars, Louise Lorraine, Joe Moore. A fair picture; pleased about fifty per cent. Stars were unknown here, which hurt to a certain extent. Used ones, photos, slide. Poor attendance. Large city; draw from church community. Admission 10-20. P. J. Del Grande, Jr., Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

F. B. O.

CALL OF HOME. (6 reels). Gasnier production. Don't pass this up. You can buy it right. Get back of it and boost; you won't go wrong. Draw neighborhood type. Chas. A. Kalbfell, Pauline Theatre, St. Louis, Missouri.

CAPTAIN FLY-BY-NIGHT. (4,940 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. Very ordinary feature. A waste of time and money to photograph such stories. Used posters, slide, newspaper. Draw better class. Had poor attendance. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

IF I WERE QUEEN. (5,953 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. This was a good picture. Hope Ethel makes more of these. Had only good comments from our audience about this one. Used posters, slide, newspaper. Good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. (6,126 feet). Featured cast. This picture did not make a big hit here. Used heavy advertising, with fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,150. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK. (5 reels). Star, Max Linder. Absolutely a roar all the way through. If they like to laugh, feed them this. Print will go through, but be careful. Usual advertising. Had good attendance. Draw general type in town of 1,364. Admission 10-25. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

STEALERS. (8 reels). All star cast. Season's largest crowd since opening. Kismet holding record of largest. Advertise this subject big and it is bound to get the crowds. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. Great picture and great business. Biggest hotel in city burned on first night; everybody wanted to see the picture. Big attendance. Large city. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. Played this four days with record breaking results. It pleased everybody; in fact, some saw it two and three times. Would advise all exhibitors who play this picture to hook up with the fire department. They like it and will do all in their power to help put it over. Thomas J. Watson, Superba Theatre, Freeport, Illinois.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. One of the greatest pictures ever screened. Will please any audience, anywhere. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

UP AND AT 'EM. (4,580 feet). Star Doris May. No good for us. Pleased very few. Salesmen wanted to book us for two days; I sure was glad I hadn't. The photos said, "You'll split your sides laughing." Some more bull—there wasn't a laugh in it. The reports (reviews) on this were away off so far as we were concerned. Advertised with ones and threes to small town patronage. Poor attendance and was glad of it. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

First National

BITS OF LIFE. (6 reels). Star cast, Marshall Neilan production. Why he should market a picture like this after making such good features is beyond me. Neilan has always been my favorite director, but this lowered him in my estimation. Very poor. Cost me very little and then I paid dear for it. Fair attendance of neighborhood class in town of 4,229. Admission 10-20, special 10-30. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. (7,268 feet). Star cast, includes Wesley Barry. A good picture both from educational and from entertainment standpoint; but very pathetic ending. Used ones, threes, photos, with good attendance, drawing town and country type. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

BOND BOY. (6,902 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. A very good picture and one that drew well here. Play it by all means. Advertising angle, Richard Barthelmess. Used heralds, mailing list and other accessories, drawing health seekers and tourists. Good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

BOND BOY. (6,902 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Very good. Barthelmess especially good. Attendance good. Town of 7,500. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

BOND BOY. (6,902 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Not as good as his other pictures, but it got a lot of business, and held up, even in Holy Week. Honestly believe he is the best drawing male star we have today. Attendance was great. City of 30,000; draw family class. Admission 35-50-75. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

BOND BOY. (6,902 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Well acted and directed, but like "Tol'able David," a little severe for some of the older patrons; but they all say "great picture." Used newspapers. Fair attendance. Draw family class. Matinee admission 10-17, evening 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

COURAGE. (6 reels). Featured cast. Good picture with a splendid lesson. Had some nice compliments from my best patrons. Advertising was nothing special. Poor attendance. Draw general class in town of about 1,000. Admission 10-20 to 25-50. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DINTY. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Cannot say too much for this one. Pleased a hundred per cent. Print in fine condition and story very good. You will be safe to go the limit on this one. Used six, ones, 11x14, photos, slide, window cards. Good attendance in small town of 900, drawing town and rural. L. D. Craig, Liberty Theatre, Sligo, Pennsylvania.

EAST IS WEST. (7,737 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Connie never has made a better picture. Not an unfavorable comment. Ran two days to big attendance in town of 1,700, drawing from town and country. Advertised with twenty-fours, threes, ones, photos. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,773 feet). Stars, Richard Dix, Claire Windsor. Good. Held interest well. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw general small town type; town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

GOLDEN SNARE. (6 reels). Featured cast. Rather a poor story. Would have been good in five reels, but too drawn out now. Usual advertising gave fair attendance. Draw retired farmers and villagers. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. Voted by my patrons one of the best of the year, and a picture that I would advise any exhibitor to play. Of course, you know their "Reasonable Prices," but if you can get this without putting a mortgage on the theatre, do so. Used mailing list, etc. Good attendance of health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. Good program picture that pleased our patrons. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Town of 9,237. Admission twenty-two cents. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. (8,500 feet). Star, Miriam Cooper. A wonderful production, and why it didn't draw is beyond me. We took in exactly $2.50 more than the film alone cost. Used ones, threes, sixes, twenty-four, etc. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

MAMMA'S AFFAIR. Star, Constance Talmadge. A very silly picture. Personally didn't see it through but got the Razz from our patrons for several days after showing it. Poor attendance. Small town. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

MIDNIGHT BELL. (6,140 feet). Star, Charles Ray. This picture went over very well. Comments by patrons were favorable. Not a great production, but fairly interesting. Fair attendance. Large city, 110,000; draw medium working classes. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Don't feel badly if you don't see your reports in print as soon after you send them as you might think right.

Every report goes through my hands, and there isn't one that I would leave out for anything. But sometimes the mail is slow, sometimes everything has to be got ready a good deal ahead of the time you see it in print.

I am out of your reports a week before you see the last one you've sent—so don't wait till you see them all used; send as regularly as your time allows. Don't fear that any will be left out. I guarantee they won't.

VAN

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE. (5 reels). Star, Charles Ray. We were several years late playing this one. Patrons who saw it a few years ago said it was a reel or two longer then. We are glad it wasn't any longer than it was. We opened a First National Week with this picture and killed the whole week. Regular lobby display and posters gave very poor attendance. Small town. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,600 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. It is a highly advertised picture in eight reels. The star, as usual, does his part well, but that is all there is in it. Rental too much for such a picture. Used big advertising. Fair attendance (Saturday night). Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

OMAR, THE TENT MAKER. (8,090 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. A wonderful picture that pleased all. Settings great. The acting of Guy Bates Post was above the best that has ever been shown on the screen. Had more compliments on this than on any other picture in a long while. Advertised with heralds, cut-outs, etc. Good attendance. Adolph Schultz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

RED HOT ROMANCE. (5 reels). Story and production by Anita Loos, John Emerson. A very good picture. Will please most of the audiences. Heard no kicks on this one. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SIGN ON THE DOOR. (7,100 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Well acted picture, somewhat melodramatic in character with a lot of stuff we do not see how the censor passed up. No kicks. Poor attendance. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Features dog "Strongheart." Was a wonderful show; everyone pleased. Make more like it, but cut the rental in half. Exchange got it all. Used ones, threes, photos, newspapers. Fine attendance, but didn't make a cent. Draw farmers and merchants in town of 460. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

SMUDGE. (5,332 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Considerably better than the last few Ray pictures have been. Considering all in all, class it as a good program show. Usual advertising drew good attendance. Town of 4,034; draw loggers, lumberjacks, etc. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. (7,118 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. This picture brought better returns on second engagement than on first. No exhibitor anywhere can go wrong on it unless he happens to get a bad print. Used regular advertising. 100 per cent attendance. Town of 3,500; draw factory people. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. It's a shame that they picked out a story like this for such a good star. It sure is a poor show compared to "Smilin' Thru." Norma does mighty good work, but the story "just ain't!" Usual advertising pulled fair attendance. Town of 4,034; draw loggers, lumberjacks, etc. Admission 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

WEDDING BELLS. Star, Constance Talmadge. Laughable domestic comedy-drama that kept the attention of the audience. No walkouts on this picture. Pleased all. Used star's name, ones, threes, slide. Good attendance. Draw general class in town of about a thousand. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Fox

BELLS OF SAN JUAN. (4,587 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A pretty good Western. Not the best picture Jones has made. Advertised with ones, posters, slide, newspapers. Attendance good. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

BRASS COMMANDMENTS. (4,829 feet). Star, William Farnum. When Farnum forsakes the society roles and heavy dramatics and appears in a two-gun Western such as this, the patrons of our theatre applaud. New print in fine condition. Used newspaper, slide, regular paper, with fair attendance in town of 3,500, drawing shop people. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

CALIFORNIA ROMANCE. (3,892 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Fine program picture; pleased some ninety per cent. Used slide, photos, posters. Good attendance. City of 30,000; draw from laboring class. Admission 10-17. Walter Babitz, Grant Theatre, Cicero, Illinois.

CALVERT'S VALLEY. (4,416 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Not much of a picture and one you can well do without. Gilbert does not have much of an opportunity in this to do the things he is capable of. Draw general type in city of 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

CATCH MY SMOKE. (4,070 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A "Hoop-la! Stand-back-or-I-fire, catch-as-catch-can" melodrama, with Tom Mix doing stunts every now and then and "Tony" very much in the foreground. I play these occasionally on a Saturday and they please my Saturday folks fine. My candid opinion—once in a while these pictures will fill the bill and give your program variety and pep. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists for good (Saturday) attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DEVIL WITHIN. (5,997 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Just a fair program picture. Some said it was too slow, then again, others said just the opposite. In my personal opinion it was a bit too slow for Farnum. Used ones, photos, slides. Fair attendance. Large city; draw from church community.

Admission 10-20. P. J. Del Grande, Jr., Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

FIGHTING STREAK. (4,888 feet). Star, Tom Mix. As a general rule a Mix picture takes well, but I, and others, have noticed that Mix popularity will soon be a thing of the past. Used ones, posters, slides. Fair attendance. Town of 1,700; mining village. Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7 reels). Stars, Estelle Taylor, Lewis Stone. Pleased all those who hadn't seen the first version starring Theda Bara. But certainly a high-class picture by itself. Used window cards, handbills and everything else. Had very large attendance in town of 2,850, drawing better class. Robert F. Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

FOR BIG STAKES. (4,378 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Mix as usual, with a few new thrills added. Will draw almost anywhere. Advertising slant—Mix. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class, all nationalities, in town of 4,100. Admission, 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, features horse "Tony." No need to comment on this one; it is too well known. If you have not run it, get busy, and don't be afraid to boost it. Attendance fine. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission, 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

IRON TO GOLD. (4,513 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Excellent program feature with Farnum in a "blue" shirt; the kind of picture the fans like to see Dustin in. Plenty of Western action and a good, interesting story. No kicks, everybody pleased. Used ones, threes, slide. Fair attendance. Draw general class in town of about 1,000. Admission, 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK. Featured cast includes Marc McDermott. A very good picture here. Full of sin and squalor and of the underworld, with good, moral theme interwoven throughout. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK. Featured cast includes Marc McDermott. Absolutely for me the worst yet. As "rotten" as it could possibly have been. Better pay for it and put it on the shelf if you have to run it. Attendance was just a few, as I told them in advance not to come as it was a lemon. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

MEN OF ZANZIBAR. (4,999 feet). Star, William Russell. Picture good enough, but not the right kind for the star. My people claim he is away from home in a picture of this kind. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw factory and steel workers in town of 1,100. Admission, 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

MONTE CRISTO (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Excellent picture. Makes them hold onto their seats through the whole show. I'd say take this one and raise your prices and your patrons won't kick when they see it. Usual advertising brought good attendance in town of 600, drawing working class and business men. N. W. Gorski, Eagle Theatre, Eagle River, Wisconsin.

NEW TEACHER. (4,453 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Shirley is improving right along and this one went over big with my patrons; and I can see no reason why it won't please in most any small town. Shirley is running her sister Viola a close second. Usual advertising brought good attendance in small town. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke Alabama.

MOONSHINE VALLEY. (5,619 feet). Star, William Farnum. Not what the people expect to see judging from the name; but a very good picture, as I believe everyone went out satisfied. Acting very bad in spots. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Town of 2,800, draw working class only for this one. David W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

PARDON MY NERVE. (4,093 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. The title of a "Buck Jones" picture is superfluous; all we need to advertise is the star. Even the "kiddie" craving for action and comedy is satisfied by these five-reel Westerns. This picture was up to his standard and that's saying a good deal. Mix will soon do a "fade-out" if Jones keeps on gaining popularity. Used one sheets with fair attendance in rural community. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This picture is very good and pleased the majority. Regular advertising brought good attendance. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This picture has created many a new Mix follower. Pleased one hundred per cent. here. If you exhibitors want a drawing card, book Tom Mix pictures. Usual mail, slide, sixes, threes, ones, photos, brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 2,850. Regular admission, 10-15. Robert Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

STAGE ROMANCE and SHACKLES OF GOLD. Star, William Farnum. Have been an exhibitor a year; have run thirty-two Fox pictures, and these have been the only "punk" ones in the bunch. Poor attendance on these. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

STRANGE IDOLS. (4,300 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. This is not the kind of a picture my patrons like to see him in. Better put him an out-of-doors picture, with plenty of action in it, or he will die a horrid death here. Usual advertising. Attendance "very much rotten." Draw general class in town of 2,000. Admission, 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

STRANGE IDOLS. (4,300 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Very good picture; pleased all. Dustin Farnum is very popular here and this type of picture just suited them. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, newspaper. Fairly good attendance. Draw small town and country class in community of 1,400. Admission, twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby, for Knight Brothers, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

TROOPER O'NEIL. (4,862 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Good Mounted Police picture. Used ones, photos, slides, newspaper. Good attendance. Town of 3,700. Admission, 10-20. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

WITHOUT COMPROMISE. (5,173 feet). Star, William Farnum. Good feature. Seemed to satisfy majority. Used regular advertising. Attendance good. Draw mixed type in town of 1,800. Admission, twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

WHILE JUSTICE WAITS. (4,762 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. A good picture. Pleased about 90 per cent. Posters and cards brought fair attendance. Town of 1,200. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

WHO ARE MY PARENTS? Star cast. I'd lay off; the picture is not there. What few patrons I had sure knocked this one good. I felt so good after playing "Over the Hill" that I let a salesman talk me into buying the eight specials and, believe me, I have not yet run one that has pleased here. When I advertise a Fox Special now my patrons will not come out. Patronage, small town, all classes. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

YOSEMITE TRAIL. (4,735 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. A fine program picture with some beautiful scenery, which appeals to most of my patrons. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Small town, 3,000. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

First Reports on These

FRONT PAGE STORY (Vitagraph-Edward Horton, Edith Roberts). A delightful film play; good story, fine cast and everything that goes to make clever entertainment. By all means get them in to the first show—nuf sed. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LUCK (C. C. Burr-Johnny Hines). This is good, although not as good as "Sure Fire Flint"; it will get the business. Hines is a coming star with original comedy. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

FIGHTING BLOOD (F. B. O.). Round 1. Starts out all right; believe this will appeal to my patrons; people talk about it. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

ADAM AND EVA (Paramount-Marion Davies). Fair picture; no business. Marion Davies no drawing card here. Usual run seven days—this one six. W. H. Lusker, Strand Theatre, Pasadena, California.

AROUND WORLD IN 18 DAYS (Universal-serial). An absolute knockout and big money getter. Play it! Play it! Jos. F. Enos, Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, California.

ADAM AND EVA (Paramount-Marion Davies). Patrons considered this better than "Java Head," and bought for one-sixth the price. A fine little picture. Many close-ups of Miss Davies. The best one I've run of the "Thirty-nine." E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

They Get The World ALONE

I have found no trade paper that equals the Moving Picture World, consequently I take no other.

EDWARD ORDWAY, Jr.,

Municipal Theatre,
Greenfield, Calif.

I prefer Moving Picture World to any trade paper, that's why it's the only one I subscribe to.

Goldwyn

BEATING THE GAME. (5,568 feet). Star, Tom Moore. A No. 1. Pleased a majority of the patrons with its good cast, excellent direction and clear photography. Ones, threes, slide, brought fair attendance. Draw general class in town of about 1,000. Admission, 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Star cast with Lon Chaney. Best that Chaney ever did, so you know it must be good. A five-reel Goldwyn Special that will hold the interest of any audience. Patrons are still talking about it. Backs up all said about it by producers. Used star's name, six, ones, slide. Fair attendance. Draw general class in town of about 1,000. Admission, 10-20 to 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BRANDING IRON. (5 reels). Stars, Barbara Castleton, James Kirkwood. Ran this as an ordinary program picture and pleased a hundred per cent. Scenery cannot be beaten. Plenty of action and that's what my patrons like. Can be bought reasonable. Film was in fair condition. Used one three, five ones, local paper. Poor attendance. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). In cast, Colleen Moore, Malcolm McGregor, Ernest Torrence. A patron on leaving the theatre after witnessing this performance, shook his head sadly and said: "Not at all convincing—not at all convincing!" and this chap is a steady patron and a very intelligent person, also a very "lenient critic." Personally (and I saw every inch of the film), it is over acted, illogical and wholly improbable; it has one good scene of the pursuers hurdling the gap over the ravine, caused by a destroyed bridge, and there are scraps all over the place, but the thinking patron who goes a little deeper than the surface won't like this a bit. Saturday night, in a factory town, they'll yowl their heads offi; my kiddie patrons all have sore throats today—and there you are. The story is antique and yet they advertise it as a prize winner. Advertising angle—wild and woolly melodrama; if they like that type and don't mind inconsistencies, play it—but buy it cheap. Used heralds, mailing list, etc. Attendance, fair. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DUST FLOWER. (5,651 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. Fair program picture. No kicks. Good print. Used regular lobby, etc. Fair attendance. Small town. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

HIS BACK AGAINST THE WALL. (4,690 feet). Star, Raymond Hatton. A good comedy with a different angle from average picture; pleased my people. Used two papers, two ones, three, photos, slide. Good attendance of family class in town of 2,400. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

WALL FLOWER. (5,500 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Good picture, but didn't receive any comedy to go along with it; that's what hurts; run every Saturday for a year with the same company and forget to send comedy—some system. Town of 1,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

YELLOW MEN AND GOLD. (5,224 feet). All-star cast, includes Helene Chadwick, Richard Dix. Weather on this night very, very bad; but at that got a pretty fair attendance. And boys—they liked it fine! Fine acting, lot of thrills, action, love, and a good plot. Advertised with six, three, one, photos. Attendance just fair (for above reason). Draw laboring class in mining town. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

Three Recent Ones

HOTTENTOT (F. N.) Star, Douglas MacLean. If you are looking for action, thrills, etc., you have it in this one. I can hardly conceive of any person who would not like this. It has a pleasing story connection and the steeplechase race is the best I ever witnessed.

BELL BOY 13 (F. N.). MacLean always gives a lot of entertainment and he did not fall down in this offering. There was not much to the plot but the action was kept up all the time.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE (F. N.). We are unable to know the reason why this is not going over as big as the bigger pictures, but it is not. It has that appeal which put the other big ones over. It is a fine picture but is only doing average business.

(All three reports from K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio).

Hodkinson

FREE AIR. (5,600 feet). Star cast. Very slow picture. Pleased my patrons much better than I thought it would when I saw it. Cannot advise any one to use it. Advertising slant, don't do more than "announce" it. Good attendance. Draw good class, railroad workers, in railroad divisional point. Admission 20-40. H. G. Braden, Little Red School Theatre, Avery, Idaho.

RIDERS OF THE DAWN. (5,000 feet). Star, Roy Stewart. A very good Western and will get by if properly advertised. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SAGE BRUSHER. (7,000 feet). Stars, Roy Stewart, Marguerite De La Motte. An excellent feature which pleased a small attendance. The flood scene was plainly artificial, or so it impressed several. Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Draw from farming community of 1,000. Admission 10-30. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,265 feet). Stars, Lon Chaney, Billie Dove. A very pleasing picture, in which many a man and woman will see him and herself as never seen before. A great drama of love, adventure and thrills in a great sea story. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ALIAS LADY FINGERS. (6,131 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. A good program picture; but Lytell will not draw for me. It will please if you can get them in. Used ones, threes, slide. Poor attendance. Town of 4,200. Draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

CONQUERING POWER. (5,500 feet). Star, Alice Terry. One of the best pictures we ever bought for the money. The acting of Alice Terry and Edward Connelly is exceptionally good. Used ones, threes and photos. Fair attendance. Town of 1,700. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

DON'T WRITE LETTERS. (4,800 feet). Star, Gareth Hughes. Good program picture; film in fine shape. Used newspapers, heralds, slide. Good attendance. Town of 400; draw all classes; no rural. Admission 15-35. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

ENTER MADAME. (6,500 feet). Star, Clara K. Young. Very good. Miss Young is very popular and pleased every one who saw it. Used lobby, newspaper, hand bills. Attendance good. Draw mixed class. Admission 10-30. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Good picture, but not up to Viola Dana's previous pictures. Used ones, threes, two newspapers, heralds, photos. Attendance good. Town of 2,400. Draw family class. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

FORGET-ME-NOT. (6 reels). Star cast. This picture is a good, clean picture that you can get behind and stay behind it. Pleases all classes. Used regular advertising. Attendance good. Town of 6,500. Draw all types. Admission 10-25. William H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

JUNE MADNESS. (5,600 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Viola Dana's best. Drew all the flappers and jelly beans. Ran a Lee Kid comedy with it and had a very good program. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. A fine picture. Pleased everybody. Miss Taylor is not only good in her part, but beautiful to look at. Book it and boost it. Used lobby, newspaper, billboard and hand bill. Attendance good. Draw mixed class. Admission 10-35. O. W. Harris, Denis Theatre, Sapupla, Oklahoma.

THEY LIKE 'EM ROUGH. (4,700 feet). Star, Viola Dana. It's a cute little story and gives fair satisfaction. Where the star is popular it will do fairly well. Advertising angles, the star is about the only angle. Fair attendance. Town of 14,000; draw class of clerks, farmers and merchants. Admission, 10-25. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9 reels). Star cast. We failed to see this one as a special, although we do know we paid a good round price because Rex Ingram produced it. Pleased fairly well, but no one crazy over it. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. (8 reels). Star, Alice Terry. A corking good picture that pleased 100 per cent, and any exhibitor with a little pep behind him can put it over successfully. It will stand all the boost you want to give it. Used photo, heralds, posters, mailing list. Good attendance. Small town. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

YOUTH TO YOUTH. (6,900 feet). Star,

JOHNNIE MILLER,
Crystal Theatre,
Pittsburg, Texas.

Billie Dove. Can't say much for this one—just an ordinary subject dealing with stage life. You can use your own judgment. Used regular advertising. Attendance fair. Town of 8,000. Draw working element. Admission 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

Paramount

ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR. (6,131 feet). Star, Charles Ray. The worst "piece of cheese" we ever had. Charles Ray and Katherine McDonald should make pictures for (China). They have no drawing power whatsoever. Patrons complain. Patrons will stay out if we ever show such pictures as "Barnstormer," "White Shoulders" and "Alias Julius Caesar." Used twenty-fours, sixes, three, ones, photo, window cards. Attendance poorer than other days. Draw very good class. The same goes for the "Barnstormer." (5,300 feet.) Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,229 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good picture. Better than the average. Considerable comedy stuff. Used newspaper, three-sheet and and three and one sheets, photos, slide, heralds. Attendance good. Town of 1,200. Draw town and country class. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,229 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Excellent picture; pleased 100 per cent. Attendance increased second night. Baby gave Meighan a close run for acting honors; however, this picture set Meighan in solid here. Used billboard, threes, ones, slide, lobby. Good attendance. Town of 2,500. Draw better class. W. P. Stone, Capitol Theatre, Asheboro, North Carolina.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Fine; this is a real picture both for the audience and the house; as many favorable comments as on "The Old Homestead." Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This picture enjoyed; pleased good business. While not a thriller, it will be found a winner of the public's opinion as one of the season's best bets. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Has everything your audience and you wish for. Has 100 per cent entertaining value. A picture that pleases the masses who attend "movie shows." On eight reels, and it is not padded. Get out the ropes when you run it. City of Chicago, three million. Draw neighborhood and family class. Admission 10-22. Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison street, Chicago, Illinois.

BEAUTY SHOP. (6,536 feet). Star, Raymond Hitchcock. Fair picture, but did not please over fifty per cent. Used regular billboard and newspaper advertising for average attendance. Town of 7,500, drawing all classes. Admission 10-25. William H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

BEAUTY'S WORTH. (6,751 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Better than we expected. The gowns and settings make it attractive to the women and the story is fair. Forrest Stanley does best work of any of the players. Miss Davies does about as well as usual and looks exceedingly attractive. Not a bad attraction for a house that caters to the "upper crust." Used rich staging. Star has some friends. Attendance good. Town of 14,000. Draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. (6,740 feet). Stars, Gloria Swanson, Rodolph Valentino. Good picture, business very good, stars well liked here. Used newspaper, slides, heralds, ones and sixes. Attendance very good. Town of about 2,000. Draw city and country classes. Admission 10-25. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

BONDED WOMAN. (7,178 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Opened big, dragged along and died out. Betty Compson must have just recovered from the flu when she played in this picture, looked sick to me. Some of the patrons doubted it was Miss Compson. Betty Compson has large following here but she did not increase her popularity on this; poor attendance due to Mucho Rain, which is worth five dollars a drop to the cattlemen. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. Admassion, 15-30, 25-50. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

BORDERLAND. (5,405 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Agnes Ayres. Artistic photography. Rest, for me, "bunk." Most certainly not a small town picture. Fell flat second night. Small town exhibitors, I would not buy it. Used regular advertising. Poor attendance. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR. (5,601 feet). Stars, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt. Lots of nice comments on this one. It seemed to have pleased all and drew fairly well. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide. Fair attendance. Neighborhood draw in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BRIDE'S PLAY. (6,476 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Suggest this as a good one to book in small towns while "Knighthood" is being played in nearby cities, as this picture offers some wonderful scenes along this line. The star, as usual, is good. Would suggest that in advertising this picture you explain the meaning of "Bride's Play," as many here did not know what to expect. Picture pleased. Fair attendance. Town of 3,000; draw from all classes. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Stars, Milton Sills and Wanda Hawley. Just so-so, the advertising on this is a lot of "bunk," the answer to "The Sheik" stuff (none of which I used) is just the ravings of a well paid press agent. I've been all through that game and know what it means. It is a fair picture, a shade above program, but such a slight shade it is barely perceptible, but of course it's one of the big ones according to the film selling "Demosthenes" and unless you buy this one right—you'll use the red ink plenty on your books. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

CAPPY RICKS. (5,962 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Fairly good picture. Nothing to brag over. Attendance poor. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

CLARENCE. (6,146 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Fair picture, good drawing power. Will please. Used story and star for advertising angles. Attendance good. Town of 4,100, draw all classes. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

CLARENCE. (6,146 feet). Star cast includes Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres, May MacAvoy. A very fine picture and one that was universally liked here. You can "step on it" from a publicity standpoint; the picture merits it. I played this after Mr. Reid "went away" and did nice business. I personally recommend the film to every one. You may have some argument over the rental, but that's all in the game. Advertising angles, stars, the stage success, etc. Used heralds, mailing list, etc. Draw health seekers and tourists. Good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Here Are Some Late Ones

PLUNDER (Pathe-Serial). One of the best serials we have ever played. We are on the fifth chapter and it is going over big so far. Work of the star is excellent. Pleases all that get to see it. G. D. Hughes, Liberty Theatre, Heavener, Oklahoma.

HEARTS AFLAME (Metro-A. Q. Nilsson). A crashing, thundering drama with a forest fire so real you hear the flames roar and the thud of falling trees, and see the heart beat of the wild animals fleeing from the red monster pursuing them. Never in the annals of screen history have we sat through such a conflagration as was caught by the cameraman who shot "Hearts Aflame," which is truly a masterpiece. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ONLY A SHOP GIRL (C. B. C.). Opened on a Monday and turned them away after a four-day run. Wonderful box office attraction that will please your patrons. Al Dobbs, Empire Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS (Preferred). One of the most beautiful pictures of the season. Did twice as much as we did with "Dangerous Age." Al Dobbs, Empire Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

NINETY AND NINE (Vitagraph). A real business getter; advertise big; you cannot go wrong as it is a splendid production with plenty of thrills and good plot. Robt. Strube, Sun Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

They Get The World ALONE

Moving Picture World is, I consider, so far superior that others are unnecessary.

O. VERNON BECK,
Starlight Theatre,
153 West 106th St.,
N. Y. City.

Moving Picture World is the only paper I take. Subscriber since 1909.

L. A. MILWAIN,
Red Moon Theatre,
Bardwell, Ky.

DEVIL'S PAWN. (4,713 feet). Star, Pola Negri. For me, punk; it did not draw. A foreign production. Star is the advertising slant. Poor attendance. Town of 2,300; regular small town draw Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

DICTATOR. Star, Wallace Reid. A 100 per cent attraction. Went over big and pleased, and Reid is drawing now better than he did before he died. Extra good attendance. Used lobby and six sheets. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Very ordinary picture that pleased only a few of the few that saw it. Business poor on this. Regular advertising. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

FACE IN THE FOG. (6,095 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. The director made the most of a very thin and improbable story. Barrymore, Owen, Wolheim, put it over. In less capable hands it would have been a sad failure. As it was it drew some favorable comments. Fair attendance. Large city of 110,000. Draw medium working classes. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FOOL'S PARADISE. (8 reels). All star cast. A high class eight-reeler that will draw like fire in some places, but there was just a little too much sentimental stuff in it. Pleased a hundred per cent. Used window cards, handbills, slide, sixes, threes, ones, etc. Very large attendance in town of 2,850, drawing better class. Robert Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

GHOST IN THE GARRET. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Gish. Can't see where the fellows get the idea this is a good comedy. For me, just ordinary comedy-drama which had no comments from patrons. Used ones, three, photos, slide and papers. Good attendance. Town of 2,400; draw family trade. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

GOOD PROVIDER. (7,743 feet). Star, Vera Gordon. Well done and well liked. We have had enough of this type for a while; however, people well pleased. Poor attendance. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

HER OWN MONEY. (4,981 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. Fair program production. Ran this picture with first episode of "Radio King" serial. Bad weather. Fair attendance. Regular advertising. Town of 992; draw mixed class. Admission 10-25 to 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

HER OWN MONEY. (4,981 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. A good program picture. Advertising angle—the star. Fair attendance. Town of 2,300; regular small town draw. Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

HUMORESQUE. Star cast. Although an old-timer it was a very good picture and entertaining. Pleased all. Regular advertising to mixed class gave fair attendance. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

IMPOSSIBLE MRS. BELLEW. (7,155 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Pleased about fifty-fifty, and one thing in its favor—those who did like it, liked it immensely, so all-in-all I'd say that this is a good picture, especially for the women, and the men don't object to the "Glorious Gloria" in the scenes at Deauville bathing beach. Exploit—Swanson, production and costumes. Local advertising to health seekers and tourists pulled pretty fair attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Another on "Pilgrim"

THE PILGRIM (F. N.). Played day and date with all five houses in this city. Charlie is still a winner and this one of his good ones. (City, 44,000). W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER. (6,173 feet). Featured cast. Should have been called "Just another picture." No wonder the public is tiring of motion pictures. They are all cut off the same pattern and dyed the same color. Poor attendance. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Star cast, includes Theo. Roberts. A good picture that opened fine and fell down hard. Can't tell you why—just giving you my experience. Played it two days and the second day's patronage was pitiful, and there you are. Be governed by that in buying. Used heralds, photos, etc. Attendance first day good, second day bad. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast. Cosmopolitan production. The picture was very pleasing and enjoyed splendid good business. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

OUTCAST. (7,309 feet). Star, Elsie Ferguson. Pleased about fifty-fifty, and that's a very liberal estimate. It's one of those "long arm of coincidence" pictures. Miss Ferguson works hard. I can't say it was successful here. The box office was very ordinary. If you don't have to play this picture and Miss Ferguson isn't particularly strong, keep off. Usual advertising. Attendance, the least said the better. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PINK GODS. (7,062 feet). Stars, Bebe Daniels, James Kirkwood. "Much ado about nothing." A beautiful production of an impossible story. The settings are the last word in artistry and the cast is excellent, but the audience here wondered what it was all about. The last two hundred feet ruined the picture, because they had to strain to secure an unhappy ending. Not worth much. Advertising slant, cast and production are high class. Had ordinary attendance. City of 14,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

They Get The World ALONE

I cannot run my show without the Moving Picture World.

F. C. BREED,
Manager,
Ideal Theatre,
Blue Ridge, Ga.

Take no other paper. Moving Picture World is very good.

W. R. NAFZIGER,
Cleghorn Theatre,
Cleghorn, Iowa.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast, Cosmopolitan production. Just a fair picture that, for me, they are asking unreasonable rentals for. I guessed 'way wrong on this; while I knew the picture was but fair, relied on the advertising and strength of the novel to pull them in. I played to a loss on the picture and so may any one else who pays big money, for the picture has received more exploitation than it deserved. Used heralds, mailing list and photos. Draw health seekers and tourists. Poor attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THIRTY DAYS. (7,788 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Not much of a picture. Reid is good and the support is excellent, but there is no story worth mentioning. It does not give the star enough to do. Fact that it was Reid's last picture brought out excellent business and no fault was found. City of 15,000; draw general type. Admission fifteen cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,158 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. What I would call a very good production. It pleased about 85 per cent of my patrons. Bert Lytell excellent, Theodore Kosloff great. Settings above the ordinary, direction great; but what is the matter with Betty Compson? I'll leave it to all you brother exhibitors—has she ever done as well as she did in "The Miracle Man"? In that she was wonderful, full of fire and pep, her acting was sincere and I can truly say marvelous. In "The Bonded Woman" she fell down, and if you run 'To Have and to Hold" notice her acting—it seems mediocre, seems to lack sincerity, she seems to have lost her pep and fire, if I may put it that way. Can you imagine Bebe Daniels in the part Miss Compson played? It would then have been a truly great picture. Miss Compson did have a large following here and personally she was my favorite star, and all I wish is that she will be able to come back, and come back strong, in some other picture. Advertised with heralds, twenty-fours, sixes, threes, ones, slide. Ran this as a benefit for the Teachers' State College. Good attendance. Town of 2,500; draw all classes. Admission 15 to 50. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,158 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. Fine story, good cast, plenty of heart interest, plenty of action and the best costume picture I've yet seen. It also has quite a bit of comedy, supplied by W. J. Ferguson. Used ones, photos, newspaper. Had fair attendance. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. When it comes to scenery this picture is right there, but when is comes to a Curwood it is no good. By no means a special, as Paramount sold it to me. Just a good program picture. Advertised with newspaper, program, slide, photos; had fair attendance the first night, nothing the next. Town of 2,000; draw general type. Admission 10-15, 10-30. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

WHILE SATAN SLEEPS. (6,675 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Fine picture, acting good. Everyone who saw it well pleased. Many favorable comments. Used billboards, lobby display, newspaper. Fine attendance. Large city, high class patronage. Admission 20-30. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Valentino certainly has lost his drawing power around here. We did a poor business in both my theatres, Del Norte and Monte Vista. Not much to the story. David Hess, Princess Theatre, Del Norte. Colorado.

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Fine picture, please any audience a hundred per cent. Used auto exploit this one and got fine results. Harold Lloyd at his best. Used six, three, newspapers. Attendance extra good.

WITHOUT BENEFIT OF CLERGY. Recreated by Rudyard Kipling. Saw very adverse report on this some time ago. It went great for us. We think it is one of the best we ever played. Music and settings very important for "atmosphere." Advertising slant, Kipling tie-up. Lots of paper for lobby and windows, good cutouts. Attendance very good. Small town, railroad division point, draw good class railroad workers. H. G. Braden, Little Red School Theatre, Avery, Idaho.

Selznick

GREEN MOON. (6,000 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. This kind of picture does not suit my patrons as there is too much killing and Russian story used is not what people like. Used ones, photos, newspaper. Fair attendance. Smith Read, Patriot Theatre, DeKalb, Texas.

REFEREE. (5,000 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. Fairly good for fight fans but there aren't enough in my town. Liked by those who saw it but the box office receipts looked like one of the boxers had knocked 'em "cold." Used lithos and newspapers. Poor attendance. Town of 4,500, draw mixed class. Admission 10-20. Wm. L. Boulware, Forum Theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio.

UNDER OATH. Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Fine picture and have made money on all Select pictures as I bought twenty-five pictures at once and paid cash so films cost me only $5.00 each. At that rate there is always a chance to make money without gambling. Used regular advertising. Attendance on this one poorest I've ever had. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

WHO AM I? (4,800 feet). All star cast. Rather old, but a pleasing story; good for the better class of patrons,. Used six, three, ones, lobby. Fair attendance. Large city, draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WHY ANNOUNCE YOUR MARRIAGE? (5 reels). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. They swallowed this one, hook, line and sinker. Good comedy drama that scored here. Advertised with one and three sheets. Good attendance. Draw mill help in town of 600. Admission twenty cents. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

United Artists

LOVE LIGHT. (8 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. Not the kind of picture expected. Just an ordinary program, that's all. The star will do the drawing. Usual advertising gave fair attendance. Town of 1,100, draw miners and railroaders. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

THE NUT. (6 reels). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. After showing this picture, in my eestimation "Robin Hood" wouldn't draw a nickel as this picture spoiled the star's popularity; too silly and we have the two reel comedies, so what sense is there in a picture of that sort? Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). D. W. Griffith production. To us this was a disappointment. It is a very good mystery-thrill-comedy picture, but did not seem to please generally. Our people probably expected too much from Griffith. A few of our friends said that it was overdrawn and the storm scene entirely too long. If you feel like you want it, be sure you buy it right or you will go in the hole like we did. Used special advertising, essay contest tie-up with our daily paper. Attendance only fair. Town of 6,000, draw all classes. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Bellville, Kansas, has written: "We sent you in reports unfavorable to the pictures and have you figured out to be 'bunk' and distributor controlled."

We are glad he's honest. We are more glad he's WRONG. We don't pick reports, good or bad—as we happen to make up the pages, so they run. We will be justified in Mr. Blair's estimation in time. We print every report.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). D. W. Griffith production. This so-called Special twelve reel picture could be made in less. Acting very silly. Too much Griffith stuff. No story. This picture could not be classed with "Skin Deep" or "Broken Chains" or "All the Brothers Were Valiant" or "Hail the Woman." I'd say "lay off that Griffith stuff." Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Don't think we ran this one! We have not been able to take enough money in, in a week, for what they will ask us, if we are to judge by the prices on "One Exciting Night" and "Tess of the Storm Country." But I saw this picture in Mr. Quimby's Jefferson Theatre, at Fort Wayne, and it certainly is all they say for it. Nothing has ever been done like it. It is worth a dollar of anyone's money. But—try and get it in a country town! That's all—there is no more. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

TAILOR MADE MAN. (8,649 feet). Star, Charles Ray. A pleasing picture, better than his previous productions. Ray always goes over in my house. Good attendance. Big city, draw from middle class. Admission twenty-five cents. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

TESS OF STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. Not one of Mary's best, but a very pleasing picture. It should please any audience seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TESS OF STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. Mary certainly came back in this one. Way ahead of old Paramounts. "Tess" did big business at advanced admission. Used newspapers, window cards, heralds. Draw neighborhood class. Had big three day attendance. March Burns, Family Theatre, Batavia, New York.

THREE MUSKETEERS. (12 reels). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This is a wonderful production. Not a very good drawing card for a small town. A well staged production but rather long. Used posters, slides, newspaper. Fair attendance in town of 4,500, drawing better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. (4,600 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Crackerjack picture for fight fans. In fact, a bell ringer; but you should select your audience for this picture as reformers and people opposed to boxing and fights will knock it. Advertising slant, star and fight. Fair attendance. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. Admission 5-10, and 10-20. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

DON'T SHOOT. (5,130 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Rawlinson is young; he injects youthful "pep" into the tired business man, and the ladies like him. Plot commonplace. Universal is showing slight signs of improvement in selecting facial types to make major roles in their plays live on the screen. This applies to this picture. Good prints and service. Advertising slant, star and good support. Good attendance. O. J. Ramey, Lyons Theatre, Lyons, Colorado.

THE FLIRT. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Great picture. Good business. Pleases all. Advertised with loby cards and newspaper. Patronage, better class. Good attendance. Strand Theatre, Pasadena, California.

GENTLEMAN FROM AMERICA. (4,658 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Best picture Hoot Gibson ever made. Very pleasing program picture. Rate it eighty per cent. Good attendance. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

LONE HAND. (4,857 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This Western has as much comedy as many of the subjects made by our leading comedians. Everyone enjoyed it and I consider it good. Used only ordinary advertising. Had good attendance. Small town of 3,000. Admission 15-20. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

LONE HAND. (4,857 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. About the best program picture I ever saw. Mr. Laemmle hands us some real Specials under the class of program pictures. This one just as good as "The Storm" in the estimation of my patrons. Advertising slant, the big dam scene when the water is let in. Very good attendance. Town of 1,500, draw working class. Admission 15-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington. (Mr. McGill, who sustained a severe electric shock recently, is now recovered and able to report again. You'll all be glad to see his reports again.)

ONCE TO EVERYWOMAN. (7 reels). Stars, Dorothy Phillips, Rodolph Valentino. Although old, it went over big. Advertised Valentino and got the crowds. Heart drama. Many good comments. Used regular advertising. Very good attendance. Mining town, draw mixed class. Admission 10-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

POWER OF A LIE. (4,910 feet). All star cast. A very good program picture. Seemed to please generally. Used paper and photos. Good attendance. J. N. Phillips, Ideal Theatre, Table Rock, Nebraska.

TOP OF THE MORNING. (4,627 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. If you have patrons who like Irish pictures, don't pass this one up, as it will get the business and I believe it will please them. Get a press book, read it over and go after 'em. Fell down here by not advertising it bigger. Regular advertising. Good attendance. Small town of 3,000, draw all class. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. (7,407 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. This star is no good for me; but this sure is a good picture. I had more comments on this than on any other one I have played. If this star is any good for you, buy quick. Had fair attendance. Town of 1,100, draw railroaders and miners. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

Vitagraph

NO DEFENCE. (5,900 feet). Star, William Duncan. I didn't see this myself but my patrons say it was a good one. Duncan takes well here and his pictures have lots of action in them. Used ones and newspaper. Fair attendance. Town of 1,100, draw second and third class type. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

PRODIGAL JUDGE. (7,803 feet). Star cast includes Maclyn Arbuckle, Jean Paige. This picture failed to impress as a Special. Maclyn Arbuckle was in the title role. Used special lithos, regular mailing list and newspaper. Attendance poor to fair. Farming community of 1,000. Regular admission 10-30, once a week 20-40. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

SILENT VOW. (4,600 feet). Star, William Duncan. As good as some of the so-called Specials. When we run a William Duncan and Edith Johnson picture we are sure of clean entertainment. Used six, three, one, slide, lobby. Very good attendance. Big city, draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SON OF WALLINGFORD. (8 reels). Star cast. Pleased all with this one. It's a very good story and well played. You can't go wrong. Joseph Schlaht, Opera House, Bowdle, South Dakota.

SON OF WALLINGFORD. (8 reels). A Vitagraph Special. Should go over in any house. Some very good comedy scenes. The last reel is full of action. Used six, three, slide, lobby, photos. Good attendance. Big city, draw all classes. Ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

THREE SEVENS. (5 reels). Star, Antonio Moreno. Here is a good picture which pleased all who saw it. Moreno well liked here. It didn't draw on account of basket ball game here, party and dance the same night. Town of 1,000, draw all classes. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. (6,100 feet). Special cast. This feature is true to its name. Did more business than I could take care of. Sure is good comedy and everybody pleased. Used threes, ones, photos. Good attendance. Draw family class in large city. Admission ten cents. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

WHERE MEN ARE MEN. (5 reels). Featured cast with William Duncan. Just a fair Western that you can get by with. Plot weak. Acting good. A. W. Sage, Masonic Theatre, What Cheer, Iowa.

Warner Brothers

DANGEROUS ADVENTURE. (7 reels). Features 500 animals. Pulled it. All said "Darn Poor Show." Flashiest circus paper you ever saw. Animals O. K. but no story. Seven reels cut to three would be O. K. Draw family trade in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Because sincere exhibitors send reports and believe in the dependability of their brother exhibitors, Straight From the Shoulder is going strong and growing stronger.

HEROES OF THE STREET. (6,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. Very good production. Usual advertising brought better attendance than past two weeks. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,200 feet). Featured cast. Very good production but for some reason business was away off. Comments were very good. Usual advertising. Fair attendance. Draw best class in city of 28,000. Admission twenty-five cents. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

RAGS TO RICHES. (6,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. Very good, pleased them all. Had more good comments on this than any picture this month so far. Wesley Barry does his best work in this. Good direction, good photography. Advertised with heralds, blotters, etc. Also used Straight From the Shoulder Reports advertising this, on the screen. Have found it to be a good stunt. Good attendance. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. Admission fifteen to fifty cents. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

RAGS TO RICHES. (6,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. A most excellent production in every respect. The kind of picture the movie audiences eat up and talk about all over the city. This is the best that Barry has appeared in and he does not "hog" the picture as Niles Welsh and Russell Simpson have great parts. Story is all there and can be depended on to please. City of 15,000, draw general class. Admission thirty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Comedies

ANY CENTURY COMEDY (Universal). These are the most consistently good comedies I use, and am using and have used Lloyds, Chaplins, Pollards, Educationals and, in fact, nearly all of them. Kids go wild over Queenie, Brownie, and Baby Peggy. No! Universal will not raise the price on account of the fact that I send in a good report. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

BIGG-BANG-BOOM (Educational-Dorothy Devore). A very good Christie comedy. Plenty of laughs. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CAPT. KIDD'S KIDS (Pathe-Harold Lloyd). Lloyd is a drawing card but not with the price they ask. I did not earn film rental on this one. I ran this with "Poor Relation." Draw small town and farmers. Admission 10-22. P. S. Nielsen, Rex Theatre, La Moure, North Dakota.

DAY DREAMS (First Natl.-Keaton). A three reel Buster Keaton comedy which was better than the average. It saved the day on account of a very poor feature, "Sheik's Wife." Average advertising. Poor attendance. Town of 7,500, draw better class. Admission 10-17-28-35. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

DIG UP (Pathe-Snub Pollard). Pollard is making a name for himself here; not too much slapstick and some new gags. Played it with "Mother o' Mine" and saved the bill. Fair attendance. Draw retired farmers and residents, small town. Admission 15-25. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

DOWN ON THE FARM (United Artists). (5,000 feet). All-star cast. This is a knockout, book it and boost it as a big comedy. Exciting scenes, good photography. Mack Sennett's name means money to me. Used six, three, one, lobby, slide. Very good attendance. Big city, draw all classes, getting ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

ELECTRIC HOUSE (First Natl.-Keaton). A high priced comedy without many laughs. Has many new stunts, but for me is worth just half what they asked. Played with "Smilin' Thru" and just hit the right kind of audience. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

THE ESKIMO (Fox-Clyde Cook). One of the poorest Cook comedies ever made. Did not even get a laugh compared to good comedies. Used posters. Good attendance. City of 12,000. Admission varies. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

FAIR ENOUGH (Educatl.-Christie). Fair enough as a comedy. Helped a poor feature get across by getting the audience in good humor. Used posters and slide for better class draw. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THE FALL GUY (Vitagraph-Larry Semon). Semon always scores a hit here. Draw small town and country type, town of 1,500. Admission twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby for F. M. Knight, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

FROZEN NORTH (First Natl.-Keaton). This is a burlesque on the great northwest. It's not as funny as some of the former Keatons, but it will make them laugh. Played this with Charlie Ray—"Alias Julius Caesar," and made a laughing program out of it and it pleased immensely. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GOLF (Vitagraph-Semon). He is the "Ace of slapstick." Has a large following here and they all come when we show him. His comedies are dependably good. Advertising slant, Semon and his slapstick. City of 14,000, draw all classes. Admission, 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HOME MADE MOVIES (First National-Ben Turpin). Very good comedy. There's fun a-plenty, all the way through. Draw general type in small town. Admission fifteen cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

ME AND MY MULE (Universal-Queenie & Maude). This is a real comedy. The horse and the mule great, and the picture went great. Kids went wild over this one; could not keep them quiet. Boost this one, it will stand it. Draw middle class in city of 15,000. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

They Get The World ALONE

I get about all the information I need from the "World," and what I do get think I can rely on.

O. M. DALE,
Union Theatre,
Cedar Grove, La.

I have been a subscriber to Moving Picture World for nearly 15 years and like it from cover to cover.

O. GILL,
Erie Theatre,
Hugo, Okla.

MY HERO (Fox-Lupino Lane). A No. 1. Full of laughs. This star's comedies are getting better each release. If you want a real comedy, get this one. Usual advertising. Good attendance. Draw general class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

NUMBER PLEASE (Pathe-Harold Lloyd). This is one of Lloyd's very good two reelers and kept them laughing throughout its entire length. Good attendance. Typical small town of 3,000, without foreigners. Admission 15-20. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

ONE TERRIBLE DAY (Pathe-Our Gang). Another one of those kid comedies that pleased all who came. If you have not played them you should. Used threes, ones, slide. Fair attendance. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

PAIR OF PEACHES (Educational). Not a very good Christie comedy. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TORCHY'S HOLD-UP (Educational). A fairly good Torchy comedy. Ending cut too short; probably due to poor film. Comedy a little old. Draw better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SCHOOL DAYS (Vitagraph-Larry Semon). If your patrons have the blues, give them this comedy and they will be cured—and make them your friends. Used regular advertising with very good results. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Serials

SPEED (Pathe). Star, Charles Hutchinson. This is a real Serial. Everybody very much pleased. Hutchinson sure gets them. Use posters, slides, newspapers. Good attendance. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). .Star, Ruth Roland. I never knew there was a Serial made that would pull them in in this town. But this one does and is the only one that ever has, and I have run some of the "best." Attendance getting better all the time. Town of 500. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

WHITE EAGLE (Pathe). Star, Ruth Roland. Fine prints and service. Good Indian type of Serial with good scenery. Action is padded too much up to episode five. It should be in ten parts instead of fifteen, if this keeps up. It draws in small mountain town in Rocky Mountains though some complain against so much padding. No doubt will pick up good later. Advertising slant, the Golden Pool (molten gold) mystery. Good attendance. O. J. Ramey, Lyons Theatre, Lyons, Colorado.

Straight From the Shoulder is growing fast because sincere exhibitors take an interest in helping their brother exhibitors with tips.

You have something to say about the pictures you run. It will be useful to many others.

SAY IT ON THE BLANK BELOW.

WINNERS OF THE WEST (Universal). Star, Art Acord. Fourth episode. It was a very poor one for me. Very small house. J. M. Vidinha, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Kauai.

Short Subjects

LEATHER PUSHERS (Universal-New Series). Star, Reginald Denny. A knockout two reel feature. Should make money for any house. I am running them after an opposition (sixteen hundred seat) house. Ran this in Holy Week. Used banner, threes, ones, slide. Fair attendance. Big city, draw all classes. Ten cents always. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

ONE OF THREE (Universal). Star, Roy Stewart. A good enough picture for a ten cent show. Regular advertising. Attendance was good. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SHERLOCK HOLMES DETECTIVE STORIES (Educational). These are foreign two-reel stories but the public likes them in my house. A good short subject with a poor feature, puts the show over. Usual attendance. Big city, draw middle class. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

TOPICS OF THE DAY (Pathe). "Topics" would be missed by my patrons and it always receives a hand before it is shown. It is worth a place on any high class program. Big city, draw neighborhood class. Attendance 10,000 weekly. J. O. Crowley, Central Theatre, Newark, New Jersey.

TOPICS OF THE DAY (Pathe). My patrons look forward for this reel. More laughs in it than in most two reel comedies. Big city, draw ordinary class. Bridesburg Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

State Rights

BARBED WIRE (Aywon). Star, Jack Hoxie. Good Western, but I simply can't get this star or his type of pictures over, here. Advertising slant, usual Western stunts. Average attendance. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. Admission 5-10 two days, 10-20 three days, 10-30 one day. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

BUTTERFLY RANGE (Steiner). Star, Neal Hart. Good, clean-cut Western. No rough stuff. Will please any Western audience. Neal puts out clean Westerns and his stuff is generally good with me. Don't overlook the six sheet on this; it will pull you extra business. It's a dandy. Draw middle class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-20. Wm. Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

COUNTRY FLAPPER (Producers Security). Star, Dorothy Gish. (5 reels). Terrible! Nuff sed. Usual advertising. Fair attendance. Draw from high class patronage in city of 28,000. Admission twenty-five cents. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

CROW'S NEST (Aywon). Star, Jack Hoxie. (4,900 feet). Fair Western. Plenty of action. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Admission 10-25. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

DESERTED AT THE ALTAR (Phil Goldstone). Star, Bessie Love. (7 reels). A real picture of rural drama and must say that it is true to life. I used a super singing "Oh, Promise Me" at the right time, which made a hit for two days. Used special printed ones, door hangers and throwaways. City of 12,000, draw all classes. Admission varies. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN? (Equity). (6,000 feet). All star cast. Very nice little picture. Pleasing. Made me money. Patrons satisfied. Regular line of advertising gave good attendance two days. Town of 2,000, draw oil field patronage. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TONIGHT? (Equity). (6,579 feet). Featured cast. One of the best drawing cards we have had for a long time. Did fairly well in spite of cold weather. Bought this reasonable and made a little money. Picture very good, but not in it with "Old Nest." If you have both booked, try to play "Old Nest" last. Used ones, a three, heralds and local paper with fair results. Town of 305, draw village and country class. Admission 10-30 and 10-35. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

CONSENSUS of PUBLISHED REVIEWS

Nobody's Bride

(Herbert Rawlinson—Universal—4,861 feet)

M. P. W.—There is plenty action, but at times consistency has been sacrificed to speed, and as a result it is a picture of only average entertainment value.

N.—If you can overlook the far-fetched plot of this molodrama and can forgive the gaps in it, just accepting it as sheer fiction far removed from life, you will doubtless find moments of interest in it.

F. D.—Provides good material for Rawlinson and holds interest despite ordinary "meller" situations.

E. H.—It is a crook story and Herbert Blache, who directed it, keeps the action at a high pitch.

E. T. R.—A fairly exciting crook story although constructed along familiar threads.

The Lion's Mouse

(Featured Cast—Hodkinson—Five Reels)

M. P. W.—Highly melodramatic plot built on a slim idea and developed in an involved fashion, so that a spectator's reaction to the picture can be only one of confusion.

F. D.—Poorly made picture of obviously foreign origin despite the appearance of two American players.

E. H.—Not one of the best foreign productions imported of late, reminding one strongly of our own early films in theme and treatment.

T. R.—The picture could hardly get over except in houses where audiences are none too critical.

N.—They've attempted to show a mystery melodrama here, but have only succeeded in showing a crazy-quilt the action of which is at odds and ends, so much so, that we defy any spectator to know what it's all about.

The Fourth Musketeer

(Johnny Walker—F. B. O.—5,000 feet)

M. P. W.—The story is appealing throughout and has humorous touches that will be sure to please.

F. D.—Pleasant enough little picture with a good number of laughs occasioned by subtitles.

E. H.—A pleasing little comedy-drama written by H. C. Witwer. Delightfully witty sub-titles help to put it over.

N.—For two or three reels it carries the spontaneity and verve of the short pieces, then it appears padded and some incident is introduced which seems forced and arbitrary.

T. R.—This is one of the best pictures that Johnnie Walker has done in some time. Should easily satisfy in practically any house.

Youth to Youth

(Billie Dove—Metro—6,900 feet)

M. P. W.—Metro offers Billie Dove in a thoroughly satisfying romantic comedy drama.

N.—One of the best that is to be had on the market at this time, although it cannot be considered a special that would get advanced prices.

F. D.—Satisfying though not unusual picture; has some good points of appeal.

T. R.—Fair entertainment. Numerous pictures of charm and a suggestion every now and then of something delightfully human make it so.

E. H.—Pleasing little comedy drama of stage life. Well staged and well acted this should prove a box office attraction anywhere.

Mr. Billings Spends His Dime

(Walter Hiers—Paramount—5,585 feet)

M. P. W.—An attractive production in all respects, it should appeal to those who like romance as well as comedy.

T. R.—A bright and breezy comedy, sparkling with action and holding its interest from first to last.

N.—Anyone seeing this picture should feel entertained. The comedy may be light and obvious, but it is clean and wholesome.

F. D.—Fairly amusing offering in which comedy business is subordinate to hackneyed revolutionary sequence.

E. H.—The first starring vehicle for Walter Hiers proves light but amusing entertainment.

Good-Bye Girls

(William Russell—Fox—4,746 feet)

M. P. W.—Lively action on the whole and a few thrills furnish an ordinary amount of entertainment.

N.—There is a fair mystery element attached to the story—but it isn't dominant enough to carry the suspense. In all it may be called just an average picture.

T. R.—This is a poor plot made into a fairly exciting mystery story.

F. D.—Slight mystery theme with romance woven in; supplies star with only fair vehicle.

E. H.—Director Jerome Storm manages to keep the action moving and the interest centered on the star in this slight story.

Your Friend and Mine

(Enid Bennett—Metro—5,750 feet)

M. P. W.—A rather intricate, elaborate plot, produced in a style that is in keeping with popular demands. But a lack of originality throughout is a disappointing feature.

T. R.—As a society drama along the usual triangle lines it should prove satisfactory to the majority who see it.

F. D.—Rather commonplace situations and familiar atmosphere that doesn't make for satisfying entertainment.

E. H.—While using a conventional theme, is good entertainment notwithstanding.

N.—Pure unadulterated hokum. This is not a picture for select audiences.

Just Like a Woman

(Featured Cast—Hodkinson—4,900 feet)

M. P. W.—Youthful comedy with fair drawing powers.

N.—There is doubtless an audience for this picture if it is shown on double feature day.

F. D.—Fairly entertaining picture not distinguished by good or bad points.

T. R.—Nice but quite lacking in the sterner qualities which make for dramatic appeal.

E. H.—A rather indifferent story with little logic for being.

The Midnight Guest

(Featured Cast—Universal—4,795 feet)

M. P. W.—Appeal almost entirely to those who like highly glamored entertainment.

N.—Does not offer much in the shape of entertainment. There are several flaws in the plot as well as in the characterization.

F. D.—Not much in this one to cause a favorable impression; rather nonsensical and improbable situations.

E. H.—Offers first-rate entertainment of the crook reform variety.

T. R.—It affords fair entertainment and nothing more.

Brass

(Featured Cast—Warner Bros.—8,000 feet)

M. P. W.—A masterpiece—artistic and entertaining to a superlative degree.

N.—With a story that has been read and discussed by millions, with direction that is brilliant at all times, with a scenic investure that is usually artistic throughout, "Brass" comes to the shadow stage in a blaze of glory.

F. D.—A very good audience picture made obviously to satisfy the picturegoing public.

T. R.—A mighty fine audience picture. Serious beyond question, but its entertainment factor predominates.

E. H.—Satisfactory screen entertainment, although ending is somewhat abrupt. Will be liked better by those who have not read book.

The Tiger's Claw

(Jack Holt—Paramount—5,297 feet)

M. P. W.—It is not always convincing, but because of characteristic color and permissable melodramatic flashes, it means entertainment for the majority.

E. T. R.—Impossible to list as either bad or good, cannot be classed as one of Paramount's high-water mark productions.

F. D.—One of those highly artificial Oriental romances full of improbabilities and with some dull moments.

E. H.—Only average entertainment. Story is rather hackneyed, but relieved somewhat by colorful scenes and good atmosphere.

N.—The story is unconvincing which of course makes its characters unreal. In its favor are some appropriate locations carrying an atmospheric flavor. And a thrill over the dynamiting of a dam.

The Flirt

(Eileen Percy—Universal-Jewel—8 reels)

M. P. W.—Intensely human drama of American life offering exceptional entertainment.

N.—A neat picture, well adapted and directed and good for any house in any locality.

E. H.—Furnishes delightful entertainment of a high standard. It is worthy of extra effort on the part of every exhibitor who plays it and has wonderful exploitation possibilities.

T. R.—Great emotional force in the screen adaptation of Booth Tarkington's "The Flirt." Also the power to make great popular appeal.

F. D.—Undoubtedly a good audience picture; a nice mixture of comedy, human interest and flapper love.

Where the Pavement Ends

(Alice Terry and Ramon Navarro—Metro—7,706 feet)

M. P. W.—There is so much to substantiate the appeal that its popularity, it seems, should be without exception.

F. D.—A very beautiful picture, gorgeously mounted and a mighty attractive entertainment.

T. R.—The story itself is interesting and although not possessed of the conventional happy ending it should register satisfactorily with audiences.

N.—Rex Ingram has done it again. Shows him at his best because the idea, a familiar one, has been treated in such an artistic way that it never becomes conventional.

E. H.—Presented with the usual finesse of Rex Ingram. Contains many dramatic moments and is skillfully treated throughout.

"The Nth Commandment"

Intensely Human and Appealing Is Paramount-Cosmopolitan Film by Sponsors of "Humoresque"

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In producing "The Nth Commandment," another Fannie Hurst story, Cosmopolitan chose the director and scenario writer, Frank Borzage and Frances Marion, who were so largely responsible for the tremendous success of "Humoresque." That this move was a wise one is evidenced by the result. Naturally under the circumstances the two pictures must stand comparison, and while "The Nth Commandment" can hardly be classed as another "Humoresque," it is a tremendous heart interest story that holds your sympathy and attention and should prove a big box office attraction in every class of house.

It is a vivid and very human little story of every-day life and ordinary people, a story rich in appeal, of a brave little girl wife who gets out and struggles to support the little family when her husband is no longer able to work, of her trials and temptations, and final success. The treatment of the theme is intensely realistic, the characters act and talk like persons in every-day life; they have their little disagreements and moments of unpleasantness; all is not sweet and sugary.

You become intensely interested in watching this little drama with its intense pathos, its touches of comedy, and are sorry when it is over. After developing the story with so much force, however, it is unfortunate that the ending has been made so conventional.

In the leading role Colleen Moore does exceptionally fine work; she fits the part and the part fits her. Always winsome, pathetic and appealing, she is excellent in her emotional scenes, never overacting. James Morrison gives a fine performance as her sick husband, Eddie Phillips contributes a new screen type as the dashing, lady-killing song writer, and George Cooper makes a small role stand out. Charlotte Merriam as the "flossy" girl is true to type.

The title refers to the fact that there are occasions arising in life that require sacrifice and self-abnegation even above the tenets of the commandments, and such a one little Sarah Juke was called on to face.

Cast

Sarah Juke.....Colleen Moore
Harry Smith.....James Morrison
Jimmie Fitzgibbons.....Eddie Phillips
Angine Sprunt.....Charlotte Merriam
Max Plute.....George Cooper

Adapted from story by Fannie Hurst.
Scenario by Frances Marion.
Directed by Frank Borzage.
Length, 7,339 feet.

Story

Sara Juke, spurning the attentions of Jimmie Fitzgibbons, marries Harry Smith, who is employed in the wrapping department of the same big department store. They are contented with their modest little flat until Jimmie, who has achieved success as a song-writer, and Angine, who is on the stage, come along. Sara becomes dissatisfied and is about to go away with Angine, when she realizes that Harry is so sick he is unable to work, and needs her. Bravely she faces the task of providing for the family and finally gets enough money together to enable them to go to California where Harry regains his health.

"The Abysmal Brute"

Many Angles of Interest and Appeal Make This Universal-Jewel a Superior Box-Office Attraction

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There are so many angles of interest in the Universal-Jewel production, "The Abysmal Brute," that it should appeal to almost every type of patron. Adapted from a story by the late Jack London, it has the vigor and dramatic value of this author's work. For the men there is the appeal of hardy manhood, of life in the open, and the atmosphere of the prize ring. But don't get the idea that it is a prize fight story only, for there is a pretty romance of the unspoiled chap from the hills who packs such a tremendous wallop in the ring that he is known as "The Abysmal Brute," but at the same time is so bashful that he runs away from all women, until the right girl comes along. Then, haltingly at first, but with all of the force of his nature when the time comes, he fights against all odds of class distinction and wins. There is the sweep of the great open spaces in the early scenes, beautiful scenic atmosphere, snappy and unusual comedy that is put across with a bang.

All of this has been emphasized and forcefully brought out by the excellent direction of Hobart Henley, by his usual painstaking attention to detail in rounding off his scenes. There is just enough of the prize ring to please those who like it and not enough to detract from the interest of those to whom the squared circle does not appeal, and these scenes are well handled, with good punches, literally as well as figuratively, and refreshing human comedy.

Added to all of these is the truly excellent work of Reginald Denny in the title role. Having achieved great success in the three "Leather Pushers" series of two-reelers, in which he essayed quite similar roles, he was an ideal selection for the hero of this feature. He looks and acts the part. His sincerity and naturalness add greatly to the role. His performance holds your interest tensely and he has your sympathy to such an extent that in the scenes at a formal dinner in the girl's home, where his uncouth manners cause amusement to some of the guests, you truly feel sorry for him.

Mabel Julienne Scott is well cast as the society girl who falls in love with the hero, not knowing he is a prize-fighter. Her turning from him when she learns this, and the final victory of her heart over the artificial restrictions of class distinction are convincingly handled. The remainder of the cast all do fine work.

It is a red-blooded story that starts off strong and keeps up a good pace, although there is a tendency to unnecessary footage in developing the detail of some of the scenes. Judicious cutting would speed up the society sequence, but even as it stands it is an excellent box-office attraction, and with many angles of exploitation and appeal, a showman's picture.

Adapted from story by Jack London.
Scenario by A. P. Younger.
Directed by Hobart Henley.
Photographed by Charles Stumar.
Length, 7,373 feet.

Story

Pat Glendon has been raised in the seclusion of the mountains by his father who was a famous prize fighter. Possessed of terrific strength, he is afraid of women and runs away from them. Coming to San Francisco, he achieves success in the ring and by his hard hitting earns the title of "The Abysmal Brute." One day he rescues a girl from drowning and wins the gratitude of her escort. It is a case of love at first sight on both sides. Following up his suit he is handicapped by his lack of knowledge of social niceties as the girl is a member of high society. Winning out against a society rival, he faces the situation where the girl learns he is a prize-fighter. She repudiates him. He refuses to accept the situation, and finally wins out.

"Bucking the Barrier"

Variety of Action and Backgrounds in Fox Production with Dustin Farnum.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Dustin Farnum delves into the two extremes of the frozen north and London society life for the thrills in his new Fox picture. It offers variety, suspense and pleasing backgrounds. It is a well-directed, entertaining feature for the average program.

Opening with a few shots of a blinding snow storm, the picture commands interest at the start. Action shifts to the residence of two dissolute brothers, and their sister, heirs to an English estate. The footage is about evenly divided between the two locations. Those who have tired of Dustin Farnum in outdoor performances will find more enjoyable entertainment in the conventional atmosphere of the rest of the picture. He plays a sympathetic part with unusual reserve.

The transplanting of all the characters to a remote corner of the world where they meet again is probably far-fetched, but forceful directing helps to offset this inconsistency. The story has been well handled. Arline Pretty is included in a cast of good types.

Cast

Kit Carew	Dustin Farnum
Blanche Cavendish	Arline Pretty
Luke Cavendish	Leon Barry
Frank Tarbox	Colvin Chase
Cyril Cavendish	Hayford Hobbs
Tyson	Sidney Dalbrook

Story by George Goodchild.
Scenario by Jack Strumwasser.
Direction by Colin Campbell
Length, 4,500 feet.

Story

Farnum portrays the Klondike miner who inherits the large English estate and there finds the woman of his heart, only to lose her and again seek the wastes of the northern drifts. In a temporary blindness during a sleet laden blizzard the woman returns with a regenerated love and a rehabilitated faith in the man.

"Masters of Men"

Thrilling Sea Story of Spanish War Days Produced by Vitagraph with Fine Cast.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

For vivid action and primitive appeal it would be hard to improve on "Masters of Men." Vitagraph has, in this, an irresistible attraction to those who like stirring pictures of the sea. This class of patrons will be especially enthusiastic over the picture because of a certain uncompromising quality which frees it from any stereotyped effect. It is undoubtedly a man's picture. But there is so much romance in it, in addition to the rugged physical conflicts, that most women will find much to entertain them.

Morgan Robertson's story with the background of the Spanish war is most favorable to good screen entertainment. There is just enough truth in the presentation to add zest to the action. The announcement that war has been declared comes at one of the most thrilling moments. There is no forcing of historical facts upon the spectator except when they serve an intensely dramatic or picturesque effect. The battle in the Santiago harbor is a big thrill.

Cullen Landis' work deserves unstinted praise. He is unusually well cast, and in playing a character constantly on the defensive gets very real results. He gets into one fight after another. The action starts with a misunderstanding during school days and takes him through various stages of a hard life at sea. There is an impulsiveness about him that makes the entire performance refreshing.

Earle Williams has a rather heavy role—that of the navy officer—which he plays with the proper manner and bearing. Alice Calhoun and Wanda Hawley are charming in the quaint dresses of 1898. Their "ladylike" manners express the dignity of that period, and offer a bit of novel amusement. They are both appealing in slightly contrasted roles. Splendid direction has been given by David Smith.

Based upon the novel by Morgan Robertson.
Scenario by C. Graham Baker.
Direction by David Smith.
Length, 6,800 feet.

Story

The story of an American boy who accepted the shame of another's crime that he might protect the girl he loved. Branded in his home town as a thief the lad runs away and joins the United States Navy. While on leave he is shanghaied and suffers brutality on board a four master sailing the Spanish Main. How he effects his escape and aids in the destruction of the Spanish fleet at Santiago provides a thrilling drama.

"The Go-Getter"

Paramount Offers Another Successful Screening of a Cappy Ricks Story

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

American business life, as Peter B. Kyne sees it, provides most enjoyable screen entertainment. All the thrills, heart interest and fun that the imaginative young salesman finds in pursuing a career are pictured. While there is an abundance of excitement and a spectacular climax, the presentation has the splendid quality of seeming natural.

Everyday humor plays a large part in its success. The business man who likes a sympathetic reproduction of experiences that might have been his own will feel that his time is well spent in seeing this picture. He will appreciate the details and the amusing slant on the well-known American art of bluffing.

Essentially the author is the star. While the acting is in splendid hands, it is the author's personality which dominates. It is the merit of the story that will call for special praise. The picture has a wealth of good situations and snappy action.

T. Roy Barnes is a most likable "go-getter." He goes through everything this side of death to get the blue vase which his capricious employer has demanded. Then he learns that the vase is worth just ten cents. The part has versatile opportunities and Mr. Barnes is a capable actor besides having an unusually winning personality.

Excellent directing by E. H. Griffith helps to make the production effective. The scenes in the shop, the fights involved and the pursuit in the aeroplane are packed with suspense. Louis Wolheim appears in a few scenes adding the desired melodramatic touch. Others in a fine supporting cast are Seena Owen, William Norris and Fred Huntley.

Cast

Bill Peck	T. Roy Barnes
Mary Skinner	Seena Owen
Cappy Ricks	William Norris
Charles Skinner	Tom Lewis
Daniel Silver	Louis Wolheim
Jack Morgan	Fred Huntley
Joe Rynn	John Carr
Hugh McNair	Fran's Currier

Based upon story by Peter B. Kyne.
Scenario by John Lynch.
Direction by E. H. Griffith.
Length, 7,771 feet.

Story

Bill Peck, a World War veteran, belongs to that class of young Americans known as go-getters. He is a lumber salesman with the Ricks lumber concern. Bill is greatly attracted to Mary Skinner, daughter of one of his employers and, being a go-getter, inside of four hours has placed an engagement ring on her finger. In Bill's effort to make good with Mary's father he is forced to do all sorts of seemingly impossible feats, even to flagging a train with an oil saturated coat after giving chase by airplane.

"Dead Game"

Snappy Action Keeps Up Interest in Universal Western with Edward (Hoot) Gibson

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Good direction carries off a familiar story in snappy style in this Universal feature for Edward (Hoot) Gibson. The story of one girl, two men and a mortgage is the basis for five reels of conflict which succeeds in sustaining interest.

Incidents similar to those frequently used to make Westerns effective, serve to keep up the excitement. The stage coach robbery; the trick of putting a dummy to bed to avoid suspicion in a midnight escape; the one thousand dollar wager as to winning the girl; and the final melodramatic interruption of the church wedding that would mean unhappiness for her—these situations are put to spectacular use. The direction is forceful and there is plenty of action.

Laura La Plante, familiar for her work in serials, proves a winsome heroine. Robert McKim plays the villain in rather repressed style, making the character seem the more realistic because of this, and Harry Carter, William Welsh and William Steele give good support. The star is natural and entertaining as usual. There are some exceptionally attractive exteriors that increase the appeal of some of the riding scenes. The theatre in search of good Westerns with action and intrigue can show "Dead Game" without lowering its standard.

Cast

"Katy" Dildo	Edward (Hoot) Gibson
Tetlow	Robert McKim
Jenks	Harry Carter
Alice	Laura La Plante

Story, scenario and direction by Edward Sedgwick.
Length, 4,819 feet.

Story

"Katy" Dildo makes a thousand dollar bet with Tutlow, scheming to get control of Alice's ranch, that Tutlow will not marry the girl as planned, before midnight. "Katy" wins, and in order to protect the girl's interest buys half-share in the property. Tutlow schemes to get rid of him, stranda him on a desert, goes back to marry the girl, but is interrupted by the arrival of "Katy" on horseback who gets the girl for himself.

"The Cowboy King"

"Big Boy" Williams Featured in Rather Light Western by Aywon

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Action, romance and comedy are found in the proportions that make the usual Western popular in "The Cowboy King." The small theatre which includes "Big Boy" Williams on its list of favorites can offer this with a fair degree of assurance.

It is not an especially heavy Western. But to those who like a more inclusive style of entertainment, with the interest divided between the story itself and the "effects," this picture will probably please more than the average thriller. Most of it is done in a lighter vein than usual. Even the fighting scenes have an undercurrent of comedy, and the role of the villain seems free from that extremely melodramatic character usually found.

Patricia Palmer gives life to a not unusual part—that of an adventurous Eastern girl who goes West to inspect a ranch which she owns. Her difficulties with neighbors who have encroached upon her property provides the drama. "Big Boy" Williams gives a demonstration of his riding and fighting ability and Bill Dyer plays the heavy.

Cast

Ethel Dunlap	Patricia Palmer
Mrs. Stacey	Elizabeth DeWitt
Wilbur	William Austin
Lije Butters	Chet Ryan
Bart Hadley	Bill Dyer

Name of author not avilable.
Directed by Charles R. Seeling.
Length, 4,000 feet.

Story

Hadley, owner of a nearby ranch, had fenced off a water hole belonging to Miss Dunlap, thus depriving her stock of water. Undaunted, the young Eastern woman and her two-fisted fighting foreman went at it for all they were worth, and after risking their lives and going through gun fights and other trying events won out at last.

HOW little some producers know about business is demonstrated daily in the independent market. Frankly, there are very few independent producers who are sincerely enthusiastic over conditions prevailing within the market. On the other hand, they have themselves to blame. A disgruntled producer is a liability. But he alone can right conditions. He can do so by insisting on more equitable contracts. He can insist on his version of fair play.

The trouble with many producers is found in their belief that the independent market still is the house of last resort for their pictures. They usually "peddle" their pictures to national distributing companies and if having been turned down by the latter, almost invariably turn to some mediocre State right distributor for help. They hastily negotiate a deal. Then come charges and counter-charges.

But, fortunately, the "money" producers making pictures direct for the independent market are increasing in numbers.

WELL-ESTABLISHED and systematically conducted independent exchanges have ceased to be dumping grounds for the discarded material of national distributors. These exchanges are the most prosperous. They represent the new type of independent exchange. However, this statement should by no means be construed to mean that we have entirely done away with the distributor and other factions ever ready to dabble in junk and discarded pictures. They still are in evidence and, unfortunately, outnumber the truly up-to-date, fair-dealing, square-shooting independent exchanges. But their number is diminishing rapidly.

The independent market, as pointed out several months ago, is today divided into three distinct classes: the co-partnership or franchise exchanges, the outright buying exchanges and those that can offer nothing but paper, or percentage exchanges. The third element is fading out. Two more seasons like the current one and they will have been but a memory.

SOME few weeks back our attention was directed to a series of advertisements appearing on the burlesque page of a certain theatrical publication. Among the advertisements was one inserted by some aspiring young soubrette, who philosophized that "it's the class that counts."

That is burlesque's way of characterizing quality. Not an ultra-modern characterization, true. But it bespeaks ambition.

The soubrettish young damsel with her self-admitted "class that counts" tendencies is typical of a certain type of operative we, unfortunately, find in our midst. We refer to that element which, while admitting that quality pictures furnish the key to the ultimate complete success of independents, continue offering virtually worthless film.

WELCOME home, Gus Schlesinger. Gus, if you don't already know it, is foreign manager for Warner Brothers. He returned last Saturday from a six months' tour of European countries. While Mr. Schlesinger has been abroad we have been noting with much pleasure the wonderful receptions accorded him by foreign film interests. We have carefully digested the wisdom one found in the addresses he made before film men there. And we have marvelled at the much good he accomplished abroad. He moved along from one country to another preaching the gospel of friendship and closer business relations between European distributor and American producer. He spoke well of everybody.

And he maintained that policy on his return. Gus had nothing but praise for the foreigners. He constructively commented on their shortcomings, but he pointedly directed attention to improvements he noted in their distribution and exhibition methods. It was with no wonder that we read the list of foreign sales he negotiated while abroad.

Welcome home, Gus!

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION has conceived a scheme that is bound to aid, financially, their product. That firm has set aside a certain sum to be given as cash prizes to exhibitors who best exploit Equity productions. The plan in its entirety is explained elsewhere in this department. It is unique and furnishes an incentive for exhibitors to "plug" Equity pictures.

WHEN the M. P. T. O. A. meets in Chicago next month many issues of direct bearing on independents will come up for consideration. The status of the independent producer is to be fixed, we understand. We hear, too, the exhibitors' organization will submit some new distribution scheme. Just what this scheme embodies is problematical.

But the point is this: no independent operative in the picture business, who can afford the time or money, should absent himself from the convention. Chicago is the place. May 19-26 is the convention date.

IT wouldn't be at all a bad idea for independent exchangemen to arrange some sort of get-together to be held in Chicago during the convention. Much can be accomplished. Much should be accomplished. There are problems within our field that never will be solved through individual action. There must be action, but it must be wholeheartedly concerted. There must be no tug-o'-war tactics.

And those are precisely the tactics utilized today. There are many evils that must be eliminated. Only an organized fight can wipe them out.

Let's have your opinion!

ORGANIZATION is a blessing when that organization functions properly and serves the best interests of all its members, collectively and individually. We have heard this past week rumors concerning an organization movement. We have vainly sought some sort of definite information on this movement. We have talked with many independents and are inclined to brand the rumors as canards.

But an effective organization could clear many problems. But it must be an effective organization. There must be no politics. We have had apologetic organizations in the past. They have promised much, but effected nothing of a constructive nature.

If there is to be an organization, let it be an unselfish one. A politically operated organization controlled by selfish interests is worse than no organization at all.

But if there must be one—let it be an honest-to-goodness, on-the-level, 100 per cent organization.

Any other organization is bunk.

NOTHING in the city of Providence is too good for Arrow. That is the way exhibitors there feel. Arrow Film Corporation has had occasion to stage premiere showings of their pictures there several times. Its latest picture, "Lost in a Big City," is now showing at the Rialto Theatre there, and doing a marvelous business. Rhode Island exhibitors are "sold" on Arrow for more good reasons than one. But there is one big reason. That is the generosity of Arrow in exploiting its product. It was Arrow Film Corporation that first proved to theatre owners there the maximum value of good exploitation.

"Lost in a Big City" is setting a record at the Rialto for two reasons: first, because that production was effectively exploited, and, secondly, because it is a splendidly entertaining picture.

DESPITE the presence of powerful theatre circuits with exchange interests, there is no territory in this country that has achieved the record set up by Philadelphia exchanges. Exchangemen there have everything to be thankful for. And, yet, they—and nobody else—are the ones who, confronted with a seemingly impossible and superlatively discouraging situation, through shrewd business and with good money-making pictures, broke down an impregnable fort and today rank among the wealthiest exchangemen in the country. What these enterprising Philadelphians have accomplished others can duplicate with hard work and persistent plugging—and good pictures. Without the latter the fight is hopeless.

"Lost in a Big City" Scores Big in Severe Box Office Test

By ROGER FERRI

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Arrow has done it again. Arrow in December, 1921, convincingly proved to New Englanders the maximum value of effective exploitation. Up to that time very little or no exploitation of any consequence was done by "down East" showmen. But "Ten Nights in a Barroom" with its circus-like advance advertising made exhibitors sit up and take notice. Every record at the Victory Theatre was shattered by that production which supported the advance promises of the Arrow exploiteer, J. Charles Davis, 2d. Every theatre in town took the tip from this experience and full page, half-page and quarter-page movie ads are virtually daily insertions insofar as local houses are concerned. As a result, Providence showmen have left nothing undone. They have originated. They have used age-worn stunts time and again.

But Arrow did a comeback. It showed local showmen a few new tricks this week at the Rialto Theatre, where its latest production, "Lost in a Big City"—distributed by Arrow and produced by the same company that made "Ten Nights in a Barroom," with the same cast, based on a story written by the same authoress, L. Case Russell, and with the same star, John Lowell, appearing personally during the engagement—is setting new marks. What more fitting test could Arrow have forced "Lost in a Big City" to undergo than to stage a premiere showing in the same city where its predecessor scored so effectively?

And Providence theatregoers—not soon to forget—responded. They made comparisons. They had not forgotten "Ten Nights in a Barroom." They had not forgotten how they had waited in long lines for many, many minutes to get a glimpse of that picture. They had not forgotten the star, John Lowell. So when "Lost in a Big City" was announced—Providence remembered. It was quite a test, a fair test, as fair a test as any production has ever been put to. That it survived the ordeal is unquestioned, for the box office receipts tell the story, a story that is illuminated with the jingle of l'argent, a story that tells of the shattering of every record at the Rialto Theatre Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. These are concededly the poorest days of the local show week—and yet they were record-breakers.

Monday morning the doors of the theatre were thrown open at 10.30 o'clock, but the doors had to be locked 40 minutes later. John Lowell obligingly hopped out of a comfortable bed, hurried to the theatre and made an appearance at 11.30 o'clock. At a quarter of 12 the house was emptied. Meanwhile, the line outside extended four blocks and at noon the auditorium was again taxed to its capacity and the fireman in attendance instructed the closing of the doors. And the crowd still came. At three o'clock it was necessary to completely shut down the box office with a card informing patrons in waiting it would not open until 4 o'clock. And it was the same story performance after performance on Monday. When the final countup was recorded, show for show, Monday night, it was shown that every record for the day had been broken.

That was what the effective exploitation that heralded the coming of the picture did on opening day. After opening day the picture is placed strictly on its merit. Tuesday morning the Providence Journal critic dug generously into the superlative adjective section of the dictionary, and praised the production as few shown here have been boosted. The Providence Tribune and News were equally enthusiastic. And the opening day audiences were apparently satisfied, for the Tuesday turnout was just as big in the afternoon as it was the previous day—and bigger at the night shows. Wednesday was just as big with about four hundred people turned away at the last night show.

So "Lost in a Big City" survived the bitter test; it proved its worth as a box office attraction and as an entertainer. And it is both. There can be no question about these facts. It is a stronger and better production than "Ten Nights in a Barroom." The latter started a certain fad. Its title attracted no few. Its story satisfied. But "Lost in a Big City" is a production of the superlative order with plenty of thrills, hokum, good hearty laughs and a story that entertains. Its title, like its older brother, is an attractor.

It was no wonder that Manager Bill Mahoney of the Rialto Theatre, was so generous with his smiles, so happy. It was with unusual enthusiasm that he told his bosses, Alton and Burton Emery, what a money-maker he had. And it must have been with no little self pride that J. Charles David, 2nd, on Monday afternoon informed W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, via the long distance phone, what the feature did that day.

In fact, Manager Mahoney, who gave Mr. Davis every co-operation in the magnificent tieups and stunts arranged by the latter, was so pleased he contracted with Vice-President J. Ray Johnston, who hastened to town when Dr. Shallenberger relayed the good tidings to him, to show "Jacqueline," another Arrow special, at his house during the week of April 23.

Providence has seldom turned out as it did the first three days of the current week to honor any star or production. But it threw wide open its doors to John Lowell and his starring vehicle, "Lost in a Big City." Newspaper unwittingly gave free space and in that way aided the engagement considerably. Mayor Joseph H. Gainer forgot his executive duties long enough to again welcome the star to the city and later gave a reception to Mr. Lowell, Mr. Mahoney, and Mr. Davis. Governor William Flynn, of Rhode Island, forgot his bitter fight with an antagonistic Legislature long enough to wish the visitors luck. The Rhode Island Senators, too, got their glimpse of the popular actor, and virtually all of them attended the Rialto showings during the week.

The advertising men and "good fellows" of Providence, organized as the Town Criers, which boasts of representative business and professional men as members, honored Mr. Lowell at a special luncheon at the luxurious Providence-Biltmore Hotel. The autocratic Plantation Club, made up of direct descendants of Roger Williams, founder of Providence, played host to him. He was the central figure at the "Annual Autopsy" of the Pen and Pencil Club of Rhode Island, made up of newspaper editors and writers of this State. He broadcasted an interesting address via the radio at the Shepard broadcasting station Wednesday night. He figured prominently in bowling championships. He was the guest of honor on Monday night at the annual dances of the Young Men's Hebrew Association at Rhodes, and the Knights of Columbus at the Arcadia, the largest dance hall in the East.

Walter Lederer, one of the owners of the Arcadia, threw open his popular home of terpsichore to Lowell. He made nightly appearances at this hall, appearing nightly to more than 3,000 people. In the course of the week Lowell will have appeared before 90,000 people, or one-third the growing population of the entire city. He was entertained also at opposition theatres, Martin Tuohey of the Emery Theatre, playing host on Saturday night prior to the opening.

A feature of the exploitation was the Movie Ball arranged for Tuesday night at the Arcadia. Many stars appeared. Those who appear in the picture and who were on hand included John Lowell, Evangeline Russell, Baby Ivy Ward and several others, including L. Case Russell, the adapter; Dell Henderson, who directed "Jacqueline" and Reed Howes, of Arrow's "The Broken Violin" cast also were present. Manager Bill Hall of the Arcadia, Mr. Lederer, Messrs. Emery, Tuohey and Mahoney acted as hosts to the stars at a dinner.

Exploiteer Davis arrived in Providence a week prior to the opening and immediately negotiated a page of co-operative advertising in the Providence Sunday Tribune to run the date prior to the opening. Jimmy Mahoney, of the Tribune advertising force, solicited the advertisements and the page attracted much attention because of its layout. After seeing that the town was circused with attractive paper, twenty-fours, sixes, threes and one-sheets, Davis proceeded to arrange for the entertainment of his star.

Wednesday afternoon Baby Ivy Ward attended a special performance of Martin Tuohey's "Kiddie Revue of 1923" at the Emery and later acted as host to the local juveniles.

The opposition to "Lost in a Big City" was of the stiffest sort. At the Emery Tuohey's "Kiddie Revue" and six acts of Loew vaudeville at 35 cents top was the attraction. Seventy-five local children appeared in this revue, which is an annual affair of much local theatrical importance. This is also the last week of vaudeville at Edward Albee's Theatre, where another 70-children act was featured along with Pat Rooney and Marion Bent in "Rings of Smoke" with an all-star supporting bill. The house advertised this great bill heavily for three weeks in advance. Incidentally, the Bonstelle Stock Company as a farewell treat gave the natives two plays, at the Opera House. The Bonstelle is a popular company that has played the Opera House for two years.

Pola Negri made her debut in her first American-made picture, "Belle Donna," at the Strand, while Jackie Coogan in "Daddy" topped the bill at the Modern. A second feature was carried at the Modern. At the Victory in addition to Charles Ray's "The Girl I Love" and a second feature, the management staged a movie identification contest, giving an automobile to the winner. The Emery-Majestic, with its 2,700-seat capacity, had a double bill including "Where the Pavements End" with Ramon Novarro, and Viola Dana in "The Noise in Newbro." Fay's Theatre gave six acts of Mike Sheedy vaudeville, including a popular local act, and Johnny Hines in his latest C. C. Burr special, "Luck."

Schlesinger Praises Conditions Abroad

English exchanges are willing to pay good prices for good pictures, observed Gus Schlesinger, foreign manager for Warner Brothers, who Saturday returned from a six-months' tour of Europe, covering all important cities there. He reported an unusual demand in England for entertaining American-made productions and all in all seemed well pleased with conditions as they exist abroad at this time. He noted, too, a marked change in the English showman and his methods of attracting and promoting business. Sixty per cent. of the theatres there, he said, change their shows twice a week, while the remaining 40 per cent. have weekly change programs. He expects to leave again for England some time in July with Harry M. Warner to make arrangements for the distribution of the 1923-24 product of Warner Brothers. In all contracts Mr. Schlesinger made in England he inserted a clause giving Warner Brothers the right to o.k. contracts and to help in the exploitation of pictures.

The following sales were negotiated by Mr. Schlesinger:

L. Gaumont, Barcelona, for Spain and Portugal; Nederlandische Bioscop for Holland; John Olsen and Co., Copenhagen, for Norway, Sweden and Denmark; to Gaumont, Paris, for France, Switzerland and Belgium, "I Am the Law" to Nederlandische Bioscop for Holland; also Inkwell and Felix cartoons and 12 Monty Banks comedies. Films Erka of Paris bought 23 Banks comedies for France, Switzerland, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Portugal. Pathe Freres, London, bought 36 Felix cartoons for England. Inkwell and Felix series to Olsen for Scandinavia.

Al Lichtman made a host of friends while abroad and his departure last week inspired trade paper editors in England to devote columns editorializing the good will he established while here.

Hugo Risenfeld sailed from New York for Europe on April 25.

Stolls in England is specializing in in the distribution and exploitation of "The Death Cheat," starring Albertini, Italy's newest screen daredevil.

The second series of the Sherlock Holmes two-reelers has been completed in England. Eille Norwood is starred in the titular role. This series embraces 15 pictures and are sequels to those already brought to this country.

British producers are a persistent lot. Despite the fact that the offer made to several American stars has been turned down, they are making further advances to these players—and are hopeful of inducing them to cross the great pond.

Italian producers are seemingly specializing in pictures of the American serial type. Four such pictures made their appearance in New York this past week.

Max Roth, foreign manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, is making wonderful headway in that capacity, having closed six important deals during the past three weeks on Principal pictures.

W. I. Forrey In Exchange Field

PITTSBURGH — (Staff Special)—William I. Forrey, of the Exhibitors Film Exchange, located at 1201 Liberty avenue, Pittsburgh, has become interested in the Merit Films, Inc., has been elected president of the corporation, and has taken over the active management of the office, located at 1030 Forbes street, where he can be seen at all times. Mr. Forrey states that the headquarters of the Exhibitors exchange will shortly be moved to the Forbes street address. Mr. Forrey is slowly recovering from a severe illness, which kept him confined to his bed the past summer.

The Standard Film Exchange, one of Pittsburgh's oldest independent exchanges, managed by "Bill" Weiland, has taken over the release in this territory of the special production, "Deserted at the Altar," formerly handled by Merit Films, Inc. "Bill" reports heavy bookings on this subject.

The Progress Pictures Corporation reports that prominent exhibitors are praising their newest release, "Her Accidental Husband." Complimentary letters have been received from such well-known exhibitors as T. L. Kearse, of Charleston, W. Va.; R. Linn, of the Virginia Theatre, Parkersburg, W. Va., and Charles Smoot, of Clarksburg, W. Va.

Equity to Pay Exhibitors to Exploit Their Productions

A new plan of co-operation and helpfulness was devised at the office of Equity Pictures Corporation during the past week and immediately adopted after a resume of its value and effect to the exhibitor, State Right exchangemen and Equity Pictures Corporation is concerned. Under this new arrangment an exhibitor will be induced to exploit the Equity product, with the chance of being reimbursed for every item of expense incurred in his publicity and exploitation.

This new plan goes into effect immediately and covers all exploitation done on the latest Equity "Special," "Has the World Gone Mad?" and also on the next big Equity release, "You Get What You Give," now in the making. For this purpose Equity Pictures Corporation is setting aside the sum of $100 for each and every week of this exploitation drive. The only obligation on the part of the enterprising exhibitor in this campaign is to put over the Equity product in some novel and appealing manner and submit a photograph of the stunt to the Equity home office.

The effort, the ingenuity, the novelty of the idea and the layout will then be carefully weighed by Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation; David A. O'Malley, manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, and G. F. Myers, director of publicity for that concern, and the amount of reimbursement determined for the stunt. A check will then be sent off to the exhibitor covering the approximate cost of his lobby display or his theatre dress-up, whichever it may be.

This entire campaign is a plan whereby exhibitors will be induced to get behind the Equity productions in the right way—not a contest. On the other hand, Equity feels that exhibitors who are wise to see the advantages of exploitation should be recognized by the producers and reimbursed for their efforts to acquaint the public with the product of the independent market.

Flop Mars Runs on Broadway; Biz Improved, However

Recent estimates on independent pictures booked in representative theatres throughtout the country show only a slight increase in after-Easter business. The flop made by "Queen of Sin" at the Lyric Theatre came as a distinct disappointment to its American handler, Ben Blumenthal, who spent considerable money trying to put this imported picture over. In addition to the house rental and excessive exploitation, said to have been handled by Harry Reichenbach, Ben Blumenthal had to come across with $1,500 to New Wayburn for his Ali Haggin tableau, which opened several weeks ago at B. F. Keith's Palace in New York. It is understood, too, that Blumenthal had to guarantee the house $3,000 a week. Considerable paper was given to plug the picture at the outset, but this apparently didn't work, for it is estimated that the first week's gross was under $2,000.

"Little Church Around the Corner" (Warner Brothers), with "Bell Boy 13" on the same bill, grossed around $28,000, which, for the week, was a splendid figure, everything considered. "Little Church" was well liked and received splendid reviews from the New York critics. Reports via the box office on this picture are wonderful and prove the picture a good puller, particularly in the better houses.

Out in Detroit, Mich., at the Madison Theatre, "Little Church Around the Corner" recently grossed $10,500 on the week, which is held by showmen in Hank Ford's burgh to be quite a neat sum. Particularly good was this gross for the reason the booking was during Holy Week.

"Poor Men's Wives," Gasnier's latest Preferred Picture, is another consistent winner. Last week up at the Rialto Theatre in Providence, R. I., with very stiff opposition, the picture did around $4,900 at 20-35 cents top figures. The house has a capacity of about 1,500. This is good for this house.

Beverly Bayne's and Francis Bushman's personal appearance in Providence, R. I., was so satisfactory to the Edward Albee motion picture booking interests, that the picture, "Modern Marriage" and personal appearance stunt, following a $7,000 week at the Victory Theatre in that city, was this week shoved up to the Boston Theatre in the Hub at regular prices. The opening was good. The Providence showing was satisfactory, the bulk of the gross representing performances when the stars did their stage bit.

Washingtonians take well to Al Lichtman product. Recently "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" played Moore's Rialto Theatre in the national capital and is said to have grossed about $12,000 in this 1,900-seat palace. This is a good gross. Hokum pictures are seemingly the big bet here insofar as independent pictures are concerned, but they must be productions and not merely film.

Will Nigh's Weber & North production, "Notoriety," took Frisco by storm the other week. This picture was booked into the Portola with a seating capacity of not more than 1,100 seats. The picture was cleverly exploited and apparently pleased, for the gross—about $8,000—was comparatively the best in San Francisco for that week. The Portola is the smallest first run house on the Coast.

Los Angeles' houses are seemingly giving independent pictures good breaks. Whether this is due to some political arrangement or whether merely an Easter ruse remains to be seen. But thus far the showing has been good. Recently "Environment" showed at Grauman's as a feature with a vaudeville bill and did around $12,000 on the week.

Charley Seeleye motored up to New England this past week, trying to spot a house for the world premiere showing of his latest picture, "What's Your Daughter Doing?" He finally closed with Bill Mahoney of the Rialto, Providence, R. I. He will probably open the early part of May. He is also dickering with William True of the Strand in Hartford, Ct., for a showing to follow the Providence date.

Here and There About the Trade

Independent Film Corporation this week closed several sales contracts on "Flames of Passion." North and South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma were sold to Enterprise Distributing Corporation. Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia went to Strand Film Service of Washington. J. J. Goldburg closed the deals.

Charles C. Burr, President of Mastodon Films, Inc., who recuperated from a recent illness in the South, returned to his desk on Monday of this week and is now busily engaged applying finishing touches to his 1923-24 plans.

W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, presided over a special sales meeting of the Arrow Exchange, New York, Monday night. The meeting followed a dinner at Hotel Astor given by Harry Thomas, general manager of the exchange, who announced a contest among salesmen of that exchange for the annual Spring sales drive. Appropriate cash prizes will be awarded.

W. Ray Johnston, President of Arrow Film Corporation, spent the current week touring New England. His first stop was Providence, R. I., where he attended the premiere showing of Arrow's "Lost in a Big ity." From there he went to Boston.

William Heineman, formerly with the Butte, Mont., Pathe Exchange, is now Montana manager for the Warner Brothers' interests, working out of Butte. His engagement resulted from an arrangement made between Warner Brothers and the Greater Features Corporation of that city.

Sol Lesser, President of Principal Pictures Corporation, is expected in New York some time next week. Michael Rosenberg, his partner, is also soon expected in New York. They will hold a series of conferences with Irving Lesser, their eastern distribution manager.

The Renown Exchange of New York and Bualo has contracted with Principal Pictures Corporation for the metropolitan and New York State distribution rights to the "Super Five" series, including "East Side West Side," "The Spider and the Rose," "Temporary Marriage," "The Man From Ten Strike" and "Bright Lights of Broadway."

Louis Baum, President of Equity Pictures Corporation, returned to New York this week from a tour of the country, selling rights to the latest Daniel Carson Goodman special, "Has the World Gone Mad?"

Edmund Goulding, who has been compiling scripts for picture presentation, may in all probability join the ranks of directors. There is some talk in film circles that he may make "Broadway After Dark" for Warner Brothers.

Word comes from London that the English production, "Chu Chin how," in which Betty Blythe will appear, will be made in Austria. Others in the cast include Oscar Ashe and several well-known British legitimate stage players.

Select Exchanges Seeking State Rights Pictures on Percentage

Select exchanges throughout the country are making percentage propositions to distributors of State rights productions. This information came to light this week with receipt of such offers by State right concerns from almost all the Select exchanges.

However, thus far none of these offers has been accepted by any distributor. In the first place the percentage arrangement outlined by the exchanges seems to be far from satisfactory to independents, who are seemingly satisfied with their present local exchange affiliations.

The Select exchanges are advancing the claim that they "are in the best position to handle independent productions because of the presence of elaborate distribution facilities," and because of this, they claim, they can, as some stated, give "maximum distribution to such product."

The status of the Select organization, however, seems to be the one obstacle in the negotiation the exchanges seek to open with independents. The exchanges are appealing only for the best product in the market, but the national distributors of such pictures already have satisfactory local connections in all the key cities, and in spots where this is not the case negotiations are pending with other State right exchanges for such a distribution association next season.

Whether or not the Select exchange managers are operating under orders from those in charge of the Selznick enterprises' affairs has not been fully stated, although in some circles it was stated that the abolition of the Select exchanges at this time would certainly in no way clear the muddle in which that organization finds itself at present. Able men are now seeking to re-establish the organization, a complete new governing body having been installed into operation.

It is pointed out in certain well-informed circles that with the distribution of State rights pictures, the exchanges serving as physical agents for the independents on a percentage or commission basis, the local Select offices may re-establish themselves. Several of the Select exchanges had been handling State rights product before the break in the Selznick organization, but these numbered about three at the most.

Novelty in New Nigh Film Titles

A combination of wording and moving illustration will be one of the distinct features in Will Nigh's coming production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North. This departure in sub-titling film will consist of the necessary wording accompanied by a scene in one corner of the film showing the characters referred to in the sub-title expressing the action exemplified in the verbal description. For example, when the conversation between Tom Moore and Ann Forrest is explained by words in the sub-title, the accompanying scene of Tom Moore and Ann Forrest is flashed in the corner of the same film where the wording appears.

The addition of a moving illustration instead of a still one is a distinct advance in sub-titling motion pictures. It will add a number of advantages to screen technique. It will remove one of the undesirable features of sub-titling, viz:—the interruption that they necessarily cause in the action. By introducing a moving scene in conjunction with the sub-titles, the attention of the spectator is held fast to the action without a hitch. The innovation also adds dramatic effect, in so far as speech and motion are directly connected. The common weakness of sub-titles representing conversation between characters is that the language appears on the screen after the conversation has been depicted. It thus loses its force.

Status of First National Exchanges As S. R. Distributors to Be Decided

Whether or not any of the exchanges affiliated with First National or outright owned by that organization shall handle independent productions will be one of the important issues that interest independent operatives in general. This question will be definitely decided at the meeting of First National moguls at Atlantic City, N. J., in the very near future. Many of the First National exchanges, through their own firm name or an affiliated subsidiary exchange, are handling independent product at present. The status of this open market buying on the part of such exchanges has been a topic of discussion among many First National franchise holders.

Some First National officials contend that the handling of independent pictures by their exchanges has "hindered the proper distribution of First National product."

Triangle Loses $89,000 Suit

The Triangle Film Corporation on Friday, April 6, met with defeat in the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, when that body handed down a decision finding the Triangle liable for a judgment of $89,000 obtained against them in the Virginia courts by Charles and Adam Kessel, Jr.

The decision is the outcome of a suit brought in the Virginia courts to recover $89,000, the value of certain shares of stock alleged to have been purchased by the Triangle corporation of the Kessels, and judgment was awarded the latter for this sum. They then brought suit in this jurisdiction to recover the amount of the judgment, and Triangle opposed this move on the ground that the suit was brought in Virginia to defeat the New York court, where it was claimed no such judgment could have been obtained. It was further claimed by Triangle that the contract for the sale of the stock was engineered by Harry and Leroy Aitken, who it was alleged profited largely, while the corporation suffered by the transaction, it having no surplus at the time with which to buy the stock, and finally that the sale was not ratified by the Triangle directors.

The lower court took this view of it and decided in favor of the Triangle corporation and the Kessels appealed same. The Appellate Division in its decision, written by Justice McAvoy, held that as the Virginia court passed on all of the questions in issue, and found that the directors did ratify the sale, it must be assumed that the corporation acted in good faith in the transaction, and orders judgment in the Kessels' favor for the above sum.

Capital Visit Is Costly to Marcus

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(Staff Special)—Gene Marcus, of the Twentieth Century Film Co., Inc., of Philadelphia, found his resent visit to Washington a very expensive affair. About four miles south of Baltimore he was arrested for speeding and required to put up $26.45 as collateral. The officer advised the astonished film man that he was making forty-six miles an hour. "I can assure you that my Maxwell would not travel that fast and neither would I take the chance of riding so fast," claims Mr. Marcus, but apparently the cop was hard-boiled, for he required him to make the deposit. All that Mr. Marcus has to show for the trip from Washington to Philadelphia is a receipt for his money.

Among the visitors in Washington were Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Company of New York City, and J. Goldburg, of the Independent Pictures Corporation. They visited the various independent film exchanges in Washington and made an effort to place some of the pictures which they handle.

Sidney C. Lust, of Super Film Attractions, Inc., has met with phenomenal success in the local distribution of Phil Goldstone's production, "Deserted at the Altar." His original stunts have attracted not only considerable interest among exhibitors but have brought considerable money at the box office as well, for they have been magnetic and the picture has held itself up once the patrons have been brought inside the theatres.

That the Independent Film Corporation exchange here will handle films in addition to those released by Warner Brothers is evident from the purchases made by that company during the past few weeks. Recently Lou Burman of Independent took over the local territorial rights to the Bobby North-L. Lawrence Weber success, "Notoriety," which is being extensively booked in this territory. Burman is also in the market for other good product for this section.

Michiganders Book Films in Block

DETROIT—(Special) — Jess Fishman, Detroit manager for the Standard, reports that exhibitors galore are booking the entire season's output of Al Lichtman Preferred Pictures. "At the beginning of the season we only sold one picture at a time, but we found that the exhibitors preferred to book more than one to be sure of getting more of them, so we altered our selling policy to suit the exhibitor and are now booking the entire series," declared Mr. Fishman. "Next season we will probably release no less than 12 Lichtman productions, starting early in August."

Dave Mundstuk, proprietor of the Exclusive Film Co., is in receipt of the following letter from Walter D. Schafer, manager of the Fox-Washington Theatre, Detroit, which tells its own story:

"The gross receipts on your picture, 'Notoriety,' were very satisfactory for the week.

"In spite of the fact that it was played the week prior to Holy Week, and in opposition to a double feature bill at Detroit's largest moving picture theatre, the gross for the two opening days was close to $4,000, and from Monday on each day's gross increased."

Dave Mundstuk, proprietor of the Exclusive Film Co., has received paper and plates on Paul J. Rainey's "Hearts of the Jungle," three reels which he recently purchased. The picture is playing the current week at the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, and the Loew State, Cleveland.

"Brass," the big Warner Bros. classic that is proving one of the biggest of the season's hits, opens at the Capitol Theatre, Detroit, week of April 15. Manager Carl Sonin is predicting that this picture will be the biggest box-office attraction of any of the Warner pictures so far released.

Jess Fishman, of the Standard, announces that "The Drug Traffic" has been booked to the Miles Theatre, Detroit, week of April 8. This picture tells an interesting story of dope and its menace. It is not a propaganda film, but is real entertainment with a great moral.

"Forbidden Trails" is the title of the fifth Jack Hoxie Western subject just released by the Favorite Film Company.

Belasco Approves "Diggers" Script

David Belasco, the theatrical producer, last week placed his approval upon the continuity of "The Gold Diggers," the first of a number of Belasco stage successes to be filmed by the Warner Brothers, according to an announcement by Harry M. Warner.

'Temptation' Booking in Philly Proof of Change in Exhibitors

That another independent production has gone over the top is being proved by the calibre of bookings that franchise holders throughout the country report on "Temptation," the all-star C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature starring Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak. Most important of these is the fact that this feature is to have its world premiere the week coming at the Carlton Theatre in Philadelphia.

The fact that the opening will take place there is noteworthy as the houses controlled by the Stanley company are among the hardest in the country in which to get bookings and only pictures of pronounced first-run calibre are accepted by them. Their interest in "Temptation" was strong, due to advance exploitation, advance reports which franchise holders had brought, and the excellent cast in the picture. This interest was so strong, in fact, that the Philadelphia franchise holder of the C. B. C. Box Office Winners series—the De Luxe Film Company—this week telephoned to the New York offices of C. B. C. asking if it would be possible for a representative of C. B. C. to bring a print of "Temptation" right over for screening for the Stanley company, as the De Luxe prints had not yet arrived.

A C. B. C. representative left New York at once with a print of "Temptation," arriving in Philadelphia about the middle of the afternoon. All other showings for the Stanley Company were cancelled so that "Temptation" might be run at once—and the immediate result was the arrangement for the world premiere at the Carlton this week.

Big Premier Set for Warner's "Main Street"

"Main Street," the Warner Brothers seventh and last classic of the screen to be released this season, will be given its premiere presentation at Mack Sennett's Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, on April 25, according to Harry M. Warner.

Preceding the presentation at the Mission Theatre, Sam and Jack Warner, production managers of the Coast studios, have arranged with the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, to hold a "Main Street" night at the Cocoanut Grove. To this affair will be invited the leading figures on the Coast, in addition to many prominent exhibitors. One of the novelties to be distributed will be miniature green painted lamp posts, 1,000 of which have been mailed to the Coast studios from the Eastern offices.

"Main Street" is an adaptation of Sinclair Lewis' novel of the same name. It was directed by Harry Beaumont, who, following the conclusion of the picture, was placed under a long term contract by the Warners. Julien Josephson is responsible for the picturization. Director Beaumont is at present hard at work editing the picture, with the assistance of Lewis Milestone.

What is described as a snowstorm de luxe, in the sense that it is a dazzling spectacle of a winter carnival, was filmed at the Warner studios. The entire set is said to have been covered with white sand, tons of fine salt, and a composition which made it glisten like the real thing. A huge ski slide was constructed and covered with ice, at the bottom of which was a large frozen pond. Three professional ski jumpers were engaged for this particular scene, and a number of professional skaters gave exhibitions of fancy skating.

Most prominent among the skaters were Hazel Dean, a butterfly and toe-dancer on ice; Mam'selle Jeanneatte, who has skated in the College Inn, Chicago, and the Biltmore, New York; Sandy Smith, who is known as the whirling dervish of icedom, has skated in every ice palace in the world. For this carnival fully 1,000 extras are reported to have been engaged, and that it took three nights to film the scenes which culminated in a blizzard.

An exact replica of Gopher Prairie, the Minnesota town around which the story is woven, was built at the Warner studios. Assistance in this reproduction was rendered by the Minnesota Chamber of Commerce. The story deals with the efforts of Carol Milford to bring life in Gopher Prairie to a plane more in keeping with her ideals. The reactions of this small town toward her attempted teachings; her married life with good-hearted, practical Will Kennicott, who could never understand her; her romance with a young man who apparently does understand her—these elements form but a part of what is declared to be an absorbing drama.

Fine Arts Studios to Spend $250,000

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—A wrecking crew is busy at the Fine Arts studios in Hollywood, Cal., tearing down the wooden buildings that have been standing on the "lot" since 1913 and which were constructed and used by D. W. Griffith during the filming of his "Intolerance," "The Clansman," "Hearts of the World" and others.

In place of the wooden structure the studio is to erect stucco buildings of the latest design and with every modern improvement. Twenty-seven new dressing rooms and fourteen executive offices have already been constructed as part of the studio's expansion plan.

Gene Sarazen, the golf champion, has completed the six one-reel pictures for Warner Brothers, at the Warner studios.

Le Stone is editing "Wandering Daughters" for Sam E. Rork, according to a statement made by the latter.

Clara Kimball Young will continue to star in pictures that will be made under the supervision of Harry Garson.

Walter McGrail, Claire Adams and Pat Hartigan appear in "The White Silence," which Chester M. Franklin is making for Warner Brothers, featuring Rintintin, the police dog.

The demand for screen stars was never as great as it is today. Every eastern train unloading here brings some famed player of the East who has heard the call.

B. P. Fineman, now in New York, has taken out a lease on the Principal studios where he will make a series of pictures this summer.

Evelyn Selbie has been signed by Ben Schulberg to play a Spanish role in "The Broken Wing," which Al Lichtman Corporation will release.

Elaine Hammerstein, who is making a picture here, has been placed under a two-year contract by the Edward Dillon Productions, Inc., whose picture will be released by Truart, of New York.

"Danger Ahead," the latest Dick Talmadge picture, produced by Phil Goldstone, has been signed.

"Desert Gold" is Jack Hoxie's latest Western picture. R. N. Bradbury is directing the picture which is expected to be ready within two weeks.

Bert Roach, who has been working with Neely Edwards, will be starred in a series of comedies to be made on the West Coast.

It is reported here that the scenarios for three of the Warner products for next season already have been completed.

Ann Luther, according to word received here by her friends, will be starred in a series of pictures to be made in this city. Who her producers are is not divulged, nor is any other information concerning her plans available.

Sheldon Lewis and Virginia Pearson are due in Los Angeles from New York late this week. They have no set plans, but should have no trouble in getting plenty of work.

Carmel Myers is being starred in P. S. Earle's independent production entitled "King Tut-Ankeh-Amen."

News Picked in Trade Circles by Our Own Hounds

Fritz Tidden, formerly of Moving Picture World's editorial staff, has succeeded Hal Reed, as exploitation and publicity manager of the Oppenheimer exchange interests in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Nat Rothstein, publicity director of Film Booking Offices and Equity Pictures Corporation, sends a postal view of French Lick, Ind., to the editor of this department, warning film men to be on the lookout in future golfing matches in which the genial Nat will participate. Joe Schnitzer is with Nat.

William D. Shapiro, of Franklin Film Exchange, Boston; Harry Charnas of Standard-Al Lichtman Exchange of Cleveland; David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc.; Tom Leonard of Pioneer Exchange of St. Louis and Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece-Al Lichtman Exchange of Philadelphia were in New York this week.

Andrew J. Callaghan is making his headquarters at the New York offices of Arrow Film Corporation.

The H. Leiber Company of Indianapolis has purchased the Indiana rights to "Luck" and "The Last Hour," two C. C. Burr pictures.

The Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing, N. Y., has given its approval of the latest C. C. Burr "Big Six" picture. "You Are Guilty."

Kenneth Webb has been engaged by Daniel Carson Goodman to direct his next picture on which production started Monday of this week in New York.

The following sales were reported this week on the Mayer & Quinn anti-dope picture, "The Greatest Menace": New England to Sam Moscow; Canada to Harry Kaufman; western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to Lande Film Company of Pittsburgh and Ohio and Kentucky to Quality Film Corporation of Cleveland.

C. C. Charles, who has been manager of the Bon Exchange in Albany, N. Y., has resigned.

Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle, Wash, has taken over the Northwestern distribution right to eight Dick Hatton western features. "The Blood Test" is the first release.

Sam Grand of the Federated Exchange of Boston, this week purchased the New England rights to the Edward Belasco production, "Her Accidental Husband." C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation completed the deal.

Jesse Weil, well known in the business, has been appointed general publicity manager of the Edward Small enterprises in New York and on the Coast.

Principal Pictures Corporation's latest production, "East Side, West Side," was shown to the trade press reviewers on Tuesday morning of this week.

Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Detroit this week signed over the series of 12 two-reel Joe Rok comedies. The comedies are now entirely sold in this country.

Thousand Houses Book "Brass"

More than 1,000 representative theatres throughout the country are reported as having booked the current Warner Brothers classic of the screen, "Brass," a Harry Rapf production directed by Sidney Franklin and adapted from the novel by Charles G. Norris, following its premiere presentation at the Strand Theatre, New York.

Of all the subjects which most vitally concern every man and woman today, and the whole fabric of modern civilization, is that of marriage. Upon this fundamental is based the screen version of the Norris novel, and its significance has caused scores of theatres to book the production.

Truart Plans Testify to Bigness of Independent Activity in 1923-24

Truart Pictures Corporation, of which M. H. Hoffman is general manager, is fast completing its production arrangements, so that it will take its place among the foremost of the industry's independent producer-distributors.

During his recent visit to Los Angeles Mr. Hoffman made final negotiations with Edward Dillon, producer-director for a series of four special productions to be completed during the forthcoming year. In order that added value may be given to this series from the exhibition point of view, beyond that offered by the fact that the pictures will be based only upon well known and successful novels and plays, Mr. Hoffman contracted for Elaine Hammerstein to star in the series. Miss Hammerstein undoubtedly brings to the independent market the biggest star name yet offered to independent buyers and franchise men. The first of these productions, directed by Edward Dillon and starring Miss Hammerstein, is "Broadway Gold," already practically completed.

As a second production, A. Carlos and Roland West are already at work on preparation for the filming of "The Unknown Purple," the tremendously successful stage success of two seasons in New York, written by Mr. West, who is also directing the motion picture. The management of the Carlos Productions will be under the supervision of Mr. A. Carlos, who for over sixteen years was associated with William Fox motion picture interests. "The Unknown Purple" is the first of a series of three or four productions by the Carlos-West unit to be made during the year for Tiffany-Truart distribution. All of them will be based on famous plays or novels.

Negotiations with at least three other units for a series of productions, including well known directors and stars of the biggest calibre, are being carried on—the announcement of which may be expected shortly. These when consummated will place Truart in a position second to none as to the quality of product it will offer on the independent market.

The distribution policy of Truart on the independent market will be the franchising of its yearly output through independent exchanges, and in some territories the franchising will be done directly with exhibitors. In this manner a nation-wide representation of Truart product will be assured with the completion of each picture, and the worth of the plays and well known novels, which will form the basis of its offerings, together with truly big stars that the independent market may now boast of, will insure the reception of Truart Pictures by first run exhibitors everywhere.

C. C. Burr Keeping Exchange Promise

Now that "You Are Guilty," the latest of the C. C. Burr Bix Six series of features, is about to be released, it is interesting to note how the producer has kept his promise of providing all-star casts, not in the sense of the overworked meaning of the term, but as a matter of cold fact.

Playing the prominent roles in "You Are Guilty" are James Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Mary Carr and little Russell Griffin. The first four named have been starring in stage productions during the past season, while Mary Carr has long been one of the most prominent stars of the screen, with Russell Griffin just coming into his own as one of the youngest and most versatile stars of the cinema.

James Kirkwood scored an overwhelming success in the leading role of Channing Pollock's wonderfully successful play, "The Fool," many critics crediting much of the success of the piece to his interpretation of the part of Gilchrist. Doris Kenyon was seen in "Up the Ladder," a William A. Brady production, which is now playing at the Princess Theatre in Chicago. Edmund Breese scored an unqualified hit in George M. Cohan's farce, "So This Is London," which still is enjoying a run on Broadway. Robert Edeson was the bright particular star of that most unusual play, "The World We Live In," a play that caused much discussion and particularly the role portrayed by Edeson.

Mary Carr will never be forgotten because of her work in "Over the Hill." In "You Are Guilty" she has another mother role of the same sort and plays it with keen understanding. Little Russell Griffin, C. C. Burr's five-year-old star, once again called forth the praise of the critics for his work in "You Are Guilty."

Bill Haggerty Is Scoring Big

PHILADELPHIA — (Special)— The organization of an anti-narcotic league in Pennsylvania is the latest exploitation of Bill Hagerty for De Luxe's dope picture, "The Greatest Menace." The idea of the organization of this league is to secure the co-operation of city officials and public-spirited citizens in every state, in which the picture plays. Letters will be sent to all ministers, club women, city officials and others who might be interested in the betterment of conditions in the various towns in which the picture will play. Their co-operation is to be asked and in this manner a word of mouth advertising campaign will be started which will be of untold benefit to the picture, when it is shown.

"Daughters of the Rich," Edgar Saltus' famous novel, now in its second week of production at the Schulberg Studios will be released by the Al Lichtman Corporation on April 22, as the eighth Preferred Picture on their program and will be available in this territory through Masterpiece. The feature which has been announced by B. P. Schulberg to be the most ambitious undertaking of his organization is being directed by Gasnier. Every effort is being made in "Daughters of the Rich" to surpass anything ever done before by this director in respect to lavish backgrounds and extravagant mounting.

The De Luxe special production of "Night Life in Hollywood," will be shown Wednesday, April 18, at the Ball Room of the Bellevue-Stratford under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of the National Stomach Hospital. Admission will be $5.00 per ticket. Special features, four motion picture stars and bathing beauties will be present.

Sigmund Lubin, pioneer motion picture producer of Philadelphia, and well known optician, is very ill at his home, 27 North Vassar Square, Ventnor. Mr. Lubin is suffering from a nervous breakdown.

Eastern Producers Are Up Against It

The wholesale invasion of the coast by stars who have been working regularly in Eastern studios because of the unusual demand on the part of western producers for talent of known quality has developed a serious problem for independent producers working in this section of the country. Several producers who had planned producing pictures in the East were this week forced to re-make their plans and lease studio space on the coast, for they were unable to get the people they wanted in New York.

Another disadvantage encountered by eastern producers now is the matter of coping with the big salaries being given stars by the westerners. Something like a dozen well-known players who have been working regularly in pictures made in eastern studios departed for the West this past week. Directors are at a loss to give reason for the sudden dearth of players on the Coast and admit their future plans insofar as New York and New Jersey studios are concerned have been considerably hampered as a consequence of this situation.

Dell Henderson, producer of the James Oliver Curwood pictures for Arrow release, is considering a series of stories which he will adapt to the screen for Pine Tree Pictures Corporation shortly. He will produce in Maine and in Fort Lee, N. J.

Raymond McKee and Marguerite Courtot, who were married last week in New York, received considerable newspaper publicity. It was one of the best and cleverest publicized picture weddings recorded in the metropolis.

Johnny Hines left last week for the West Coast, where he will be starred in "Little Johnny Jones," which Warner Brothers will produce and distribute next season.

James C. Morton, formerly of the vaudeville team, Morton & Moore, is now writing "gags" for C. C. Burr's All-Star Comedies, which are being made at the Glendale, L. I., studio.

Sheldon Lewis and Virginia Pearson left on the Twentieth Century Tuesday from New York en route to the coast, where they expect to remain indefinitely.

Russell Griffen is now working with Paramount in "Lawful Larceny" at the Famous Players Long Island studio.

Jane Thomas is another well-known star of independent pictures who has been placed under contract by the Famous Players outfit for pictures made at their Long Island studios. Maurice Costello is another.

Owen Moore, now that his work in Bill Nigh's picture has been completed, is expected to settle on the coast, having received a number of big offers from coast producers.

The wholesale departure for the West of stars who regularly work in the East has developed a situation that is forcing prospective independent producers to go to the coast to make their pictures.

Immediately after completing his rounds of personal appearance engagements, John Lowell, star of "Lost In a Big City," will return to Gloverville, N. Y., where he will start on the third Blazed Trails production for Arrow release. Lowell appeared personally in Providence, R. I., this week.

Reed Howes, who plays a leading role in "The Broken Violin," and Dell Henderson, the director, together with Evangeline Russell, L. Case Russell and Baby Ivy Ward, went to Providence, R. I., to attend a movie ball there.

The following stars, well-known to independents, attended the annual dinner and ball of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce at Hotel Astor Thursday night, April 12: Lew Cody, Martha Mansfield, Dorothy MacKaill, Tom Moore, Ann Forrest, Edward Earle and Mary Carr. A good time was had by all.

Gallagher & Shean Independents

Gallagher and Shean will make a series of feature productions that will be distributed in the independent market. Arrangements for the first of the pictures are now being made. Bobby North and L. Lawrence Weber are reported to be interested in the production.

"Poor Men's Wives" for Opening Night

The Al Lichtman release, "Poor Men's Wives," was chosen as the feature with which the magnificent new Palace Theatre in San Antonio was opened. The Palace, which is now the largest house in that city, booked this recent Gasnier production for Preferred Pictures for the first week following the completion of the building. A special presentation was put on in addition to the thirty piece symphony orchestra which will be a permanent attraction at the Palace.

The San Antonio Express published a special section in its Sunday edition dealing with news about the theatre and "Poor Men's Wives."

Harold Lloyd Liked in All Localities

Sectional divergence of popular taste in picture entertainment, Pathe reports, fails to apply in the case of Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy, "Safety Last." Whether the scene of the opening performance is the Strand Theatre, on Broadway, New York, or the Majestic Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma, or in any city between, the story is the same — attendance records smashed and audiences enthusiastic, it is stated.

During the entire week at the Strand no performance of the new Lloyd comedy thriller revealed a vacant seat, according to reports. Opening of "Safety Last" in other representative cities are reported in the following telegrams received by Pathe:

Pittsburgh — "Million - dollar Grand, seating 2,500, opened at 10 o'clock with 'Safety Last.' At 11:30, standing room only. Twelve, house was jammed. At 2:30 people were waiting in line, five abreast in lobby, which is over 100 feet long."

Portland, Ore.—"'Safety Last' opened to capacity business at Majestic Theatre Saturday. Sunday, notwithstanding heavy rain, broke house record, previously held by 'Dr. Jack.'"

Des Moines, Ia.—"'Safety Last' sensation here Sunday. Des Moines Theatre, Iowa's biggest, turned hundreds away at both afternoon and both night performances."

Tulsa, Okla.—"'Safety Last' opened at Majestic Theatre to 4,496 paid admissions. Played to capacity all day. Continuous line-up at box office from 1 p. m. until 10 o'clock, at which time they were forced to stop selling tickets."

Detroit (from Manager G. W. Trendle)—"Delighted to say Harold Lloyd's 'Safety Last' exceeded all house records on Sunday opening. As Adams Theatre has played almost every big film attraction, thought you would be glad to know this."

Indianapolis — "'Safety Last' opened Apollo Theatre Easter Sunday, 1:30, to wonderful business house. By 2 o'clock crowds locked out to street. This continued all day. All records broken."

"Robin Hood" Does Turnaway Business

The special first-run engagement of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" in New Orleans indicates that apparently this United Artists' release can suffer no "flop." Opening at the Tulane Theatre at two shows a day and regular attraction prices on Sunday, March 25, it was forecast that this picture would have rough sledding in the following seven days, Holy Week. However, the picture opened Sunday night to turnaway business. Fully a thousand persons had to content themselves with buying seats for future performances.

Monday night showed a house practically at capacity. Tuesday came along with standing room only. Wednesday brought a very heavy matinee and a big night, although Wednesday nights at the Tulane normally are light. In addition to this there was a heavy advance sale for the remainder of the week, with Saturday already sold out. The intervening Thursday and good Friday showed a slight drop, but nothing like that predicted and expected.

An extra morning performance had to be arranged for to accommodate business. The engagement ended April 7 on account of a season of musical stock set for opening April 8. The New Orleans amusement world gasped to see "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" breaking all Holy Week records in the city.

Metro Has Screened J. W. Riley Poem

James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," has been converted into a photoplay by Harry Garson, with Elliott Dexter and Helen Jerome Eddy in the leading roles. It will be released by Metro. Joseph Wenght directed.

Return to Paramount

Two former Paramount stars return to the banner of that company in Charles Maigne's production of Maximilian Foster's story, "The Silent Partner," just started at the Lasky studio. They are Owen Moore and Robert Edeson, and they will be featured with Leatrice Joy, the cast also including Robert Schable, Forrest Robinson, Patterson Dial, William Calvert, Maude Wayne, Bess Flowers and Lura Anson.

BARBARA BEDFORD
utilizes an Eskimo snowblindness protector to combat the Kleig eye menace while working in Jesse D. Hampton's pictureization of Rex Beach's novel "The Spoilers" at the Goldwyn studios.

Book "Poor Men's Wives"

The A. H. Blank Enterprises have booked the Lichtman picture, "Poor Men's Wives," for a number of the houses on their circuit in the Middle West, among which are the Princess, Sioux City, Iowa; the Rialto, Burlington, Iowa; the Grand, Dubuque, Iowa; and the Garden, Davenport, Iowa.

Other recent contracts for first runs on this Preferred Pictures are the Liberty, Kansas City, Mo.; the Leland, Albany, New York; the Jackson, York, Pa., and Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, New York.

Notable Cast Is in Metro-Mayer Film

A notable cast, it is said, is to appear in "The Law-Bringers," the forthcoming Metro-Louis B. Mayer offering. The book, by G. B. Lancaster, was adapted for filming by Monte M. Katterjohn.

The cast includes Renee Adoree, Earle Williams, Pat O'Malley, Barbara La Marr, Wallace Beery, Joseph Swickard, Pat Harmon and George Kuwa.

Shaw Will Direct Viola Dana

Viola Dana, in her new series of special Metro productions, will be directed by Harold Shaw.

"Rouged Lips," a story of the stage by Rita Weiman, has been selected as the first picture. Production will begin April 15.

"The Talisman" to Get New Title in Filming

"Richard, the Lion Hearted," is the title which has been chosen for the Associated Authors' screen version of "The Talisman," now in course of production at the Thomas H. Ince studios for release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation. The bluff and hearty monarch has won such tremendous popularity through Wallace Beery's portrayal of him in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" that the Authors' trio have renamed their initial production for him.

In the Frank E. Woods production the thread of his story is picked up to fill the gap in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" from the time he left England until his return. All the scenes of the new picture are laid in and around Jappa, Palestine, where his dramatic battles with the Saracen hordes were staged.

Wallace Beery, who played Richard in the Douglas Fairbanks production, is playing the same role in "Richard, the Lion Hearted." Chet Withey is directing.

Florence Vidor Film Praised by Critics

The Associated Exhibitors' feature, Florence Vidor in "Conquering the Woman," has just finished a successful run in Ascher Bros.' big State-Lake Theatre, in Chicago. Big gatherings marked every showing and the reviewers of the local newspapers were enthusiastic in their praise. Thus Bob Reel, director of the motion picture section of the Chicago American, said: "'Conquering the Woman' is clever, clean and wholesome, the kind of thing that is bound to please a large majority of people—particularly the romance-hungry younger generation."

Virginia Dale wrote in the Chicago Journal: "This screen comedy sets one to chuckling right from the title, 'Conquering the Woman.'"

The opening of the run in Nixon & Nirdlinger's Belmont Theatre, Philadelphia, inspired this comment by the Philadelphia Inquirer: "It is romantic and well supplied with amusing situations. Florence Vidor and David Butler play the leading roles and do them full justice."

"The Sunshine Trail" Ready for Bookings

Prints of "The Sunshine Trail," the latest comedy featuring Douglas MacLean, produced by Thomas H. Ince for First National distribution, have been shipped to all First National exchanges.

Reports show a consensus of opinion that it is one of the best comedies in which the young comedian has ever appeared. The story is praised for its wholesome humor and originality. That MacLean is steadily increasing in favor as a box office attraction is indicated by the big demand for early bookings of the picture, which is an April release.

Under the direction of James W. Horne there appears an extremely well-blanced cast, including Edith Roberts as the ingenue heroine, William Courtright, Josephine Sedgwick and Barney Furey.

In the character a Western rancher, MacLean adopts "spreading sunshine" as a part of his working philosophy. On his way East to visit his old home town of Paxley Center he assumes charge of a child in order to assist a woman whom he supposes to be its mother. The woman turns out to be the ringleader of a band of crooks, and, of course, the innocent youth becomes involved.

New Metro Film

Jackie Coogan's first picture under the auspices of Metro Pictures Corporation will be "Long Live the King," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, successful American novelist.

C. Gardner Sullivan is at work upon the screen adaptation, by arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck, who recently retained Mr. Sullivan to provide stories for the stars under his direction. Collaborating with him is Eve Unsell, loaned for the Coogan picture by B. P. Schulberg.

Prices Are Raised for "Modern Marriage"

For the engagement of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne at the E. F. Albee Victory Theatre, Providence, with their screen and personal appearance in "Modern Marriage," an unusual scale of prices was put into effect without diminution of patronage. Opening at thirty-five cents top, admission was raised on Wednesday to fifty cents and on Saturday further increased to seventy-five cents. The production is an American Releasing film.

Cosmopolitan Films Make Unique Record

For the first time in the annals of motion picture history, three productions created by the same film company were presented simultaneously on Broadway this week. The three films, all Cosmopolitan productions, are: "Enemies of Women," which entered the second capacity week of its indefinite run at the Central; "The Nth Commandment," at the Rivoli, and "The Go Getter" at the Rialto. Not only have all three films been greeted by capacity audiences, but they have been unanimously endorsed by the critics, it is stated.

After eulogizing its picturesqueness, Quinn Martin in The World said of "Enemies of Women": "With all Europe as a background, with the combination of a no-account Russian nobleman and a beautiful and equally care-free Lady Alicia, Monte Carlo, the war, Joseph Urban's imagination and beautiful girls all joining hands and doing more than they have any right to do, it is an eyefull."

The Telegram paid "Enemies of Women" this tribute: "It is without doubt one of the most lavish films ever placed before the public." The Globe said: "It is the last word in what is known in cinema circles as 'a box office attraction.'"

The Sun described it as "a brilliant screen production." The Times acclaims it as a picture "one cannot afford to miss," and The Telegraph describes the fencing bout in which Barrymore engages as "one of the most thrilling moments I have ever seen on either stage or screen."

Equally lavish in praise is the criticism of the other two Cosmopolitan pictures which are being shown simultaneously with the presentation of "Enemies of Women."

Cast Announced for Stahl Picture

Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis have been engaged by John M. Stahl for leading roles in his newest Louis B. Mayer production for First National release. Mr. Stahl has spent several months in the preparation of the story and continuity for this picture, which, it is expected, will create even more of a stir than did "The Dangerous Age."

In recent screen appearances Miss Prevost has revealed such marked talent in roles calling for emotional as well as comedy expression that Mr. Stahl chose her as the ideal interpreter of the leading female character. Her work has been highly praised by motion picture critics and her drawing power at the box office has been proven.

Hodkinson Canadian Film Liked

What is considered an indication of the intrinsic merit of the Hodkinson picture, "The Man from Glengarry," is a report which comes from Halifax, Canada, where the picture had its first showing before a Halifax audience. Mr. W. H. Dennis, general manager of the Evening Mail, states that it played to crowded houses during its entire run and received highest praise from the local critics.

Mr. Dennis further states: "The true-to-nature quality in this production appeals in a wonderful way. Halifax movie lovers will look forward with anticipation of pleasure to the showing of the next Canadian made pictures."

In view of the fact that this is an all Canadian made photoplay produced by the Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., based on a story laid in the Canadian wilds, its reception is considered to be a real criterion of its merit.

Editors Liked Story

"A Front Page Story," Jess Robbins' comedy on newspaper life, with Edward Horton in the leading role, was shown to the State Convention of Newspaper Editors of Kansas at Topeka. The editors voted it to be the most realistic newspaper story ever screened, it is said.

In Leading Role

Lewis Stone has been engaged for one of the leading roles in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest production for Metro. Mr. Stone had prominent parts in two of Mr. Ingram's recent pictures, "Trifling Women" and "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Print of Baird Film Here

The first print of "The Destroying Angel," the second of the 1923 specials featuring Leah Baird, to reach the East arrived in New York a few days ago, and officials of Associated Exhibitors had a preview of the picture. This feature is perhaps the most ambitious Miss Baird has done, and, in the judgment of the Associated executives, is certain to enhance greatly the popularity of this player and prove a superior box office attraction.

Miss Baird herself adapted the picture from the well-known novel of Louis Joseph Vance. It is in six reels, which abound with romantic features, contain many thrilling situations and are said to present some remarkable scenic effects.

"Souls for Sale" Breaks World Record at Capitol Theatre

The world's record for one day's receipts for any motion picture theatre is now hanging on the doors of the Capitol Theatre, New York. "Souls for Sale" put it there.

The Sunday takings for this Goldwyn Rupert Hughes picture were $13,677.50. Edward J. Bowes, vice president of Goldwyn, went before a notary public and issued a sworn statement as to Sunday's receipts.

Previous big records for one day's receipts at the Capitol were held by "The Christian," "Mad Love," "Robin Hood" and "Passion," but they were all shattered by "Souls for Sale."

The seating capacity of the Capitol Theatre is 5,400 and six shows a day are given, making the day's seating capacity 32,400. The number of persons who saw "Souls for Sale" screened on Sunday was greatly in excess of the seating capacity; the standing room was all occupied at every showing. Thousands of persons who wished to obtain admission were not even able to get standing room.

Production of "Dulcy" to Be on Large Scale

"Dulcy," the new Constance Talmadge production being made by Joseph M. Schenck at the United Studios for First National release, is being filmed on an even larger scale than "East Is West," according to reports received.

Two gigantic stages at the United Studios have been given over to the sets for this picture, being directed by Sidney Franklin. The production calls for massive mountain cabins of the aristocratic New York families, lavish offices of the principals in the play, palatial homes, interior and exterior, and beautiful gowns. The location trips will take the large company supporting Miss Talmadge to Yosemite Valley, Big Bear Lake, San Francisco, San Diego and Barstow, calling for special trains and the transportation of much equipment.

Miss Talmadge should be at her best in this picture. The story is woven around the life of a beautiful daughter of a wealthy family, and is full of clean, sparkling humor and interesting action.

Jack Mulhall, who played the leading masculine role in "Within the Law" and who has been signed to a long contract by Mr. Schenck, is playing opposite Miss Talmadge. Claude Gillingwater, noted character actor, has an important role, and others of importance in the cast are Ann Wilson, Johnny Harron, Ann Cornwall, Andre de Beranger, Gilbert Douglas and Milla Davenport.

Final Editing Done on Hodkinson Special

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that the finishing touches have been made in the final titling and editing of the spectacular Hodkinson production, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," to be released April 15. The photodrama after retitling will be eight reels in length. Special efforts, it is said, have been directed toward the editing of this production, and the results are said to be of such value as to do credit to any program. The titling has been carefully done by Randolph Bartlett.

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" is a Richard Oswald production, presented by the Sterling Pictures Corporation, and features Liane Haid, one of the most beautiful women in the world, in the role of Lady Hamilton. The story is based on Lord Nelson's last love and offers a heart-touching drama surrounding the life of a real historical character.

It is also stated that this production also offers many exciting scenes surrounding the famous historical Battle of Trafalgar and its interest is increased to a great extent by the authenticity of the details of war of Lord Nelson's time.

The story, according to those who have already seen the production, is one of unusual interest inasmuch as it is true and affords some exceptionally big dramatic moments as well as a well sustained interest throughout.

Charles Jones Film Scheduled by Fox

Fox Film Corporation has but one release—"Snowdrift"—starring Charles Jones on its release schedule for the week of April 15. The locale centers about the gold fields of the Yukon.

The feature was directed by Scott Dunlap from the story by James B. Hendryx.

Holubar With Metro

Allen Holubar, motion picture director, is to produce a series of four or more productions for distribution by Metro.

Co-operating With Book Publishers

A co-operative tie-up has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with Grosset & Dunlap, publishers, as regards the Ernest Shipman production, "The Man From Glengarry," a Hodkinson feature from the novel of the same name by Ralph Connor. A special edition of the book will be gotten out by the publishers in which illustrations from the film story will be used. Also a special jacket in four colors will be printed and used on all of the books in this new edition.

Grosset & Dunlap have also arranged for the printing of a special window card which will be sent out to all book dealers and jobbers. The Hodkinson Corporation have instructed all representatives throughout the United States to co-operate with the publishers wherever possible.

"The Man From Glengarry" is a story of a lumberman's feud and has been staged upon the exact locations as called for in the book, namely, the Ottawa River in Canada. It is an Ernest Shipman production directed by Henry McRae and features Warner P. Richmond, Anders Randolph, Pauline Garon and Marion Swayne in the cast.

Fred Niblo to Make Metro Film

Fred Niblo is busy with preparations for filming "Captain Applejack," the stage success by Walter Hackett, which will be Mr. Niblo's second production for Louis B. Mayer presentation and Metro release.

Barker to Make "Trail of 98"

The rights to Robert W. Service's story, "The Trail of Ninety-eight," have been secured by Louis B. Mayer for production as a motion picture by Reginald Barker. It is to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation, following the completion of "The Law-Bringers," the present Barker production.

The photoplay whose background is the famous gold rush will be the most pretentious undertaking in the careers of both Reginald Barker and Louis B. Mayer. An entire company will make the trip to the Yukon Trail, and 2,000 extras will be employed to bring into being the army of thousands who braved the terrible dangers in their mad rush for the precious gold. It is the aim of the producers to portray accurately and vividly this great and colorful incident in American history. All the dramatic incidents of the expedition which took hundreds of lives will be enacted for the camera.

To Use Settings of Original Story

Moving in a cavalcade along the picturesque roads near Santa Cruze, the company for the George Melford Paramount production, "Salomy Jane," will take up location soon at Boulder Creek Canyon, Cal., with more than a hundred people, an ancient stage-coach and 75 horses in the train.

The Paramount location hunters found the most fitting place in California to be the very hills and forests which gave Bret Harte inspiration to pen the original story. An old mining village, with its primitive cabins, was discovered, and 500 logs were ordered to build additional houses and to restore some of the old buildings.

The saloon, the general store, the blacksmith's shop—all will be there. The road leading through the town will be tramped down with horses to give true realism to the scene.

Besides Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn, the featured players, seventy-five of the best rough-riders in Californit will ride the range in "Salomy Jane." The featured players are supported by a cast of well-known motion picture actors. They are William Davidson, Charles Ogle, William Quirk, G. Raymond Nye, Louise Dresser, James Neill, Tom Carrigan, Clarence Burton, Barbara Brower and Jack Padjan.

Semon Film Finished

Larry Semon has finished another comedy, "The Midnight Cabaret," and is busy producing another for Vitagraph. Kathlyn Meyers plays opposite the comedian in "The Midnight Cabaret."

New Vitagraph Film

The newest Jimmy Aubrey comedy is "The Detective." Hellen Kesler plays opposite Jimmy in this comedy.

To Film Stage Hit

In May or June, Fox will start production on the West Coast of "Six Cylinder Love," William Anthony McGuire's comedy sensation, which was one of last season's biggest New York hits and is now playing on the road.

Hodkinson's Film Breaks Records

According to reports the Hodkinson super-special "Down to the Sea in Ships" is shattering house records for attendance and receipts wherever it has been shown.

In the face of the stiffest competition such as "Safety Last," "The Third Alarm," "Driven" and "Gunpowder River," the Hodkinson whaling classic stood them up at the opening performance at the State Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., and broke the house records. This is considered exceptional in view of the fact that "The Third Alarm" and "Gunpowder River" were sponsored by the Fire Department and the American Legion respectively.

At the Palace Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., the previous house record held by "Manslaughter" was smashed at the opening performance and on the following days as well. In keeping with its record of achievement, "Down to the Sea in Ships" brought forth the standing room only sign at the Rialto Theatre, Washington, where it opened to 5,620 admissions on the first day. This was considered extraordinary business with a seating capacity of 1,700.

Fox's Theatre at Springfield, Mass., was also added to the list where the crowds were turned away.

Leah Baird Honored by Texas Governor

Leah Baird has been the guest of honor at a large number of social functions, many of them of an official nature, in Texas during the last two weeks. The round of entertainments began April 3, when the popular player, accompanied by her husband and producing manager, Arthur F. Beck, and a party of screen friends from Hollywood, arrived in Houston. She was received by Mayor Holcombe and a committee of leading citizens, escorted to William Politzer's Iris Theatre, and there, in an official ceremony, was presented with the keys of the city.

"Is Divorce a Failure?" the current Associated Exhibitors' release, which is the first of the Leah Baird 1923 Specials, had its first Texas showing in Houston, under the auspices of the Houston Woman's Club. According to information received at Associated's home offices in New York, the opening performance was attended by 8,500 persons, despite a driving all-day rain.

In Austin, the state capital, on Friday of last week, Governor Pat M. Neff gave a reception in the Executive Mansion for Miss Baird and the other Hollywood visitors, after which "Is Divorce a Failure?" opened its run in J. J. Hagman's Queen Theatre. This feature was the attraction at the opening of the million-dollar New Palace Theatre in San Antonio, Sunday evening, Miss Baird making a personal appearance and being enthusiastically received by a gathering that packed the house. On the next day she was the honor guest at receptions by local women's clubs and by the Mayor, and, as in Houston, received the keys of the city.

Two Fox Specials

"Gentle Julia," Booth Tarkington's popular novel, and "The Shadow of the East," by E. M. Hull, author of "The Sheik," will be William Fox specials, and will go into production within the next few months.

Green Back on Coast

Alfred E. Green, who recently completed "The Ne'er-Do-Well," starring Thomas Meighan, at the Paramount Long Island studio, has returned to the West Coast, where he will produce his next Paramount picture, the title of which has not yet been announced.

Smith Pleased With Vitagraph Film

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, who recently went to Hollywood to personally supervise the production of "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," has seen the first takes of this new special and has expressed himself as immensely pleased with Director Victor Schertzinger's work.

Drawing New Class of Patrons

An interesting report has been made by Carl Stearns Clancy, producer of "The Headless Horseman" or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, proves that the picturization of this famous legend has been bringing into the theatres a new class of patrons. Many of these were never classed as motion picture enthusiasts before.

This is explained, according to Mr. Clancy, by the fact that millions of people, both old and young, know the story. It is a subject that has been taught in schools. In many instances exhibitors have held the production over for a longer time than called for by the original contract due to the unusual demand to see this production.

According to Mr. Clancy, "The Headless Horseman" is doing exceptional business all over the country and he has been in receipt of many commendatory letters from exhibitors. "The Headless Horseman" features the inimitable Will Rogers in the role of Ichabod Crane.

J. S. Blackton Lauds "Masters of Men"

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who recently resumed his office as vice-president of Vitagraph, sent David Smith a telegram congratulating him on his production, "Masters of Men."

"It is one of the finest sea pictures I have ever seen," the Commodore said.

Critics Agree "Safety Last" Is Acme of Screen Amusement

No disagreement, says Pathe, is noted between the New York newspaper reviews of "Safety Last" and the character of the reception given Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy thriller by the audiences which crowded the Strand Theatre at every performance all last week. So far as both critics and patrons are concerned, "Safety Last" is speeded on its way as the last film word to date in the realm of feature comedy.

The following appeared in the morning and evening issues on Monday and during the week. The Sun said in part: "'Safety Last,' which brings young Harold Lloyd and his faithful horn-rimmed specs to the Strand this week, is pretty nearly the most amusing movie ever made."

Daily News: "As we park at our typewriter, having just come from Harold Lloyd's latest picture and first seven-reel comedy, 'Safety Last,' we feel more like a press agent than a reviewer or critic. Our problem is to find the proper assortment of words that will make you attend the Strand without fail and get your share of the laughter that is being dispensed there."

The Journal: "'Safety Last,' Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy, is so good that it hurts."

Telegraph: "If laughter really makes people grow fat Mr. Plunkett will be compelled to widen the exits at the Strand Theatre, where Harold Lloyd is appearing this week in 'Safety Last.'"

Times: "Harold Lloyd's latest effort is filled with laughs and gasps. Wneh people are not rocking in their seats at the Strand they will be holding on to the chair arms to keep them down."

Evening World: "Any way you take it, 'Safety Last' is a corking good film—one of the best this intrepid young screen cut-up has ever made, and well deserves a niche in Cinema Hall of Fame. Don't miss it! If you do you'll regret it all the rest of your life."

Evening Telegram: "At the Strand Theatre the hearty laughs that ring through that playhouse reveal unmistakably that Harold Lloyd has made another hit—and a bigger and better one—in his new film comedy, 'Safety Last.'"

New York American: "'Safety Last" will appeal to those who look for reasons for their laughter, as well as those who are satisfied with mere laughter on its own account. It is a most ingenious affair. The thing is cumulative. It begins funnily enough and ends in a veritable hurricane of mirth."

Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale" Draws Great Crowds to Capitol Theatre

Goldwyn's Rupert Hughes' picture, "Souls for Sale," came to New York Sunday last at the Capitol Theatre. The critics on the New York daily newspapers were just as enthusiastic as were the fans, thousands of whom were unable to obtain even standing room.

Quinn L. Martin said in the New York World: "A remarkable cinema. It will be one of the most successful pictures financially which have been made up to this time."

Rose Pelswick, The New York American: "A picture that will make countless fans all over the country rush to their favorite theatre where it is being shown."

Journal of Commerce: "It justified all the preliminary praise that had been lavished on it."

P. W. Gallico, Daily News: "A ten-ring movie circus—a great audience picture."

Helen Pollock in the Telegraph: "An unusually stimulating photoplay."

Don Allen in the Evening World: "In our estimation, the Goldwyn production of Rupert Hughes' latest and best screen effort is the best audience picture we ever saw."

Landon M. Robinson in the Globe: "Never fails to hold the interest; there is not a dull moment." Evening Telegram: "Here is a real story—a ten strike if ever there was one."

The Sun: "With those remarkable, frantic scenes of the burning circus giving it a tremendous pull, it should gross a pile of money."

"The Ragged Edge" a Goldwyn Picture

"The Ragged Edge," a romantic tale of China and an island in the South Seas, is the second of the Distinctive Pictures Corporation's productions to be distributed by Goldwyn. It has been adapted from the widely read novel by Harold MacGrath.

The release date for "The Ragged Edge" is May 14. It is the second of the twelve big productions which Distinctive Pictures will make within the year for distribution by Goldwyn. The first of the twelve is "Backbone," from Clarence Budington Kelland's novel, "Backbone," which will be released April 30.

Alfred Lunt, who makes his first screen appearance in a stellar role in "Backbone," is the leading member of the cast of "The Ragged Edge." Playing opposite him is Mimi Palmeri. "The Ragged Edge" was directed by Harmon Weight.

Misses Shaw, Arthur and Dwyer with Fox

In line with its recent announcements of policy and building expansion, the Fox Film Corporation announces this week the first signing of new players to be added to the group now working at the West Coast Studios.

Peggy Shaw, Jean Arthur and Ruth Dwyer, all prominently cast in many of the biggest productions of the past year, have been signed to Fox contracts as leading ladies in many of the specials planned for the future.

Miss Shaw is now at the Hollywood studio, making her initial picture on the Coast as leading lady for Dustin Farnum in his new feature, "The Grail."

Miss Dwyer was featured player in "The Stealers," former leading lady for Eugene O'Brien, and prominent in numerous specials. Jean Arthur, the third of this group, has been the subject of much favorable criticism for her dramatic work of the past few years and will play leads opposite the Fox stars.

Starts First Five Reeler

William Desmond, newly signed Universal feature star, already has started work on his first Universal five reeler, word comes from the coast. It is "McGuire of the Mounted," a spirited Northwest Mounted Police story written and scenarized by Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor at Universal City, assisted by George Hively.

Calls Hughes Film a Great Epic

After seeing Rupert Hughes' latest Goldwyn picture, "Souls for Sale," run off at a special screening before its members, the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce sent the following telegram to Mr. Hughes:

"At last we have seen a picture into which is breathed the life and soul of Hollywood. It will go down in film history as the first great epic woven about the capital of film-land."

Vitagraph Receives New Duncan Film

William Duncan's new picture, "Playing It Wild," has been received at Vitagraph, Brooklyn. Those who have seen the first print say that it is the best picture Duncan has ever made. Edith Johnson is co-starred with Duncan. Duncan is starred in "Playing It Wild" with a cast which includes Francis Powers, Dick la Reno, Edmund Cobb, Frank Beal, Frank Weed, Robert E. Reis and Harry Todd.

"The Brass Bottle" for First National

The first scenes in "The Brass Bottle," a Maurice Tourneur picture of ancient Arabia and modern London, were taken recently at the United Studios, Los Angeles. The picture is an adaptation by Fred Myton of the novel of the same name, written by F Anstey, an English author. It will be released through First National.

Willat Completes Paramount Film

McGowan Completes "Deep Waters"

"Deep Waters," the first big picture to be produced by Continental Productions, Inc., has been completed by J. P. McGowan at Miami and will be distributed by American Releasing. Besides directing, Mr. McGowan plays one of the leading roles, the other featured member of the cast being Helen Holmes.

Joins American Releasing

Charles J. Giegerich, until recently with F. B. O., has joined American Releasing as special representative of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne on their tour of personal appearances in conjunction with the new picture, "Modern Marriage."

Ovation Given to Universal Film by Philadelphia Public

One of the most elaborate picture premieres ever held in Philadelphia was accorded last Monday night to H. A. Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa, with Gun and Camera," the jungle picture which ran for eleven weeks at the Lyric Theatre, New York, at $1.65 top, and which is being distributed by Universal.

Opening at the Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia's big "legitimate" house, the big game picture, scaled at the same price it commanded on Broadway, started off with such a flare of popular succes and commendation that Philadelphia film men predict for it a Quaker City run which will equal if not eclipse its phenomenal run in New York.

Monday night's opening took its place as one of the social events of the Philadelphia season. So intense was the interest among Philadelphia photoplay fans that the Forrest Theatre opened with an advance sale that far outclassed anything ever attained by any picture in that city, Universal states. Unable to accommodate the crowds, the Forrest theatre management had to turn hundreds away. During the entire time the opening show was being screened there was a box office line buying and reserving tickets for subsequent days.

The Philadelphia showing absolutely convinced the officials and sales executives of the Universal Pictures Corporation that in "Hunting Big Game in Africa," Universal has the big box office bet of the season.

The Public Ledger of Philadelphia characterized the film as "remarkable," and "more exciting than fiction." The Philadelphia North American, reviewing the picture, started off by saying: "If anything more could possibly be crowded into 'Hunting Big Game in Africa,' the cinematographic record of a two years' expedition to this land which seems to be the only remaining evidence of prehistoric existence, one wonders just what it could possibly be."

The Philadelphia Inquirer was also enthusiastic. "Beyond doubt these are the most remarkable films which have ever been shown her," said its reviewer.

Dr. Clarence H. Woolston, of the East Baptist Church, Philadelphia, was one of those who sought out the manager of the theatre after the show to commend the picture.

Paramount Studios Hum with Activity

With thirteen companies at work, the production activity of Paramount at the West Coast and Eastern studios is now at the highest point in years. In California nine companies are either at work in the Lasky studio or on location, while in the East three companies are busy at the Long Island studio and one is in Florida.

Out at the Lasky studio James Cruze is shooting the final sequences for "Hollywood," in which a galaxy of stars is to appear. George Fitzmaurice is nearing the end of "The Cheat," with Pola Negri starred and Jack Holt featured.

Sam Wood has "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" well along toward completion. William de Mille is finishing "Only 38" with Elliott Dexter, Lois Wilson, May McAvoy and George Fawcett featured.

Herbert Brenon is now in San Francisco getting prison scenes for "The Woman With Four Faces," featuring Betty Compson and Richard Dix. Jerome Storm has a good start on "Children of Jazz," with Theodore Kosloff, Ricardo Cortez, Eileen Percy and Robert Cain featured.

George Melford has just started "Salomy Jane." Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn are featured. Rob Wagner is doing "Fair Week." Walter Hiers is star. "The Silent Partner" was started April 2 with Leatrice Joy, Owen Moore and Robert Edeson featured.

At the studio in Long Island City Allan Dwan is nearing the end of "Lawful Larceny." Nita Naldi, Hope Hampton, Conrad Nagel and Lew Cody are the featured players. Interior scenes for "The Exciters" will soon be begun. Following the completion of "Fog Bound," Dorothy Dalton has started work under the direction of Ralph Ince in "Leah Kleschna."

Agnes Ayres and the company making "The Heart Raider" are still in Florida on location, but are expected back at the studio in a few days.

Irvin Willat is now busy with the cutting and assembling of "Fog Bound" and will start work in a week or two on a new production starring Thomas Meighan, who recently completed "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

Competing Producers Praise Paramount

Some of the finest tributes paid James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," have come from stars, directors and writers associated with competing companies. The latest of these has been received by Jesse L. Lasky from Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Edward Knoblock, who recently saw the picture at a special showing in Hollywood. "Doug" penned the letter and his fellow artists affixed their signature.

To Tell the Truth About Hollywood

An unusual campaign to tell the world the truth about Hollywood is being conducted from the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., simultaneously with the release of "Souls for Sale," the story of movie life written and directed by Rupert Hughes.

The Truth-About-Hollywood campaign is in three general divisions as follows:

1. Special showings of the picture to Los Angeles and Hollywood civic organizations, with talks by members of the cast on their experiences and daily life in motion pictures.

2. Telegrams from the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to every important chamber of commerce in the United States informing them that a true picture of life in Hollywood and the motion picture community is contained in "Souls for Sale."

3. Telegrams from motion picture players and directors to their relatives and to newspapers in their home towns saying that they want their own people to know about the life they lead and that seeing "Souls for Sale" is equivalent to a trip to Hollywood.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce entered wholeheartedly into the Truth-About-Hollywood campaign after "Souls for Sale" was previewed by the board of directors.

The telegram sent by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to brother bodies throughout the country reads as follows:

"A true picture of life in Hollywood and its motion picture colony is given in Rupert Hughes' new photoplay, 'Souls for Sale,' previewed by Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce today. This film is not an attempt at propaganda, but a dramatic portrayal showing picture making in a big dignified way, faithfully depicting the dangers, hardships and stress which players undergo in their lifework of weaving romance for the world. "(Signed) Los Angeles Chember of Commerce."

Ince Begins Film

Ralph Ince has begun production of a new picture starring Dorothy Dalton at the Paramount Long Island studio. It is a French story adapted by J. Clarkson Miller from the play "Leah Kleschna," by C. M. S. McLellan.

'Under the Red Robe' Being Made

Spectacular feats of horsemanship are a feature of "Under the Red Robe," Cosmopolitan's picturization of Stanley Weyman's famous story of the same name which went into production last week under the direction of Alan Crosland, who directed "Enemies of Women."

For the riding scenes, more than one hundred cavalry horses will be used, a score of which will be "stunt" horses. The most thrilling of these riding scenes is said to be a realistic duel on horseback between Gil de Berault, impersonated by John Charles Thomas, the noted American singer, who is making his motion picture debut, and the Duke of Orleans, played by William H. Powell. Another thrill is furnished when Berault and his mount make a flying leap from a swinging drawbridge.

To assist Director Alan Crosland in the direction of these scenes, Captain Henry C. G. Mills, who won fame with the Dragoon Guards of Australia in the war, has been engaged. Captain Mills will act as riding master and instructor for the company and will also appear in a number of "Dare Devil Stunts."

"Under the Red Robe," in which Virginia Harned won fame on the speaking stage, will be picturized on a lavish scale. The cast features Robert Mantell, who plays Cardinal Richelieu; John Charles Thomas, as Gil de Berault, and Alma Rubens, who impersonates Rene. Bayard Veiller, celebrated playwright, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," and now writing for Cosmopolitan, adapted the story to the screen.

A story of the early days of the gold rushes to the Hudson Bay territory has been selected as the theme of "The Journey of Death," the latest William Fox production starring Tom Mix, which has just been completed at the West Coast Studios.

This picture was directed by John Ford from the story by Jules Furthman.

"Madness of Youth" Released April 8

One of the most interesting characters since "The Miracle Man" was introduced to screen fans, says Fox, is portrayed by John Gilbert in "The Madness of Youth," which was released April 8 by the Fox Film Corporation.

Both exhibitors and newspaper reviewers who have seen this production are unanimous in their praise, it is said.

Pola Negri in Cast

Pola Negri, among other noted actors, will appear in Paramount's big special production, "Hollywood," which James Cruze, producer of "The Covered Wagon," has been making for the past three months at the Lasky studio.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Educational Wins Suit Involving Title of Sherlock Holmes Series

Educational announces that the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, in a decision handed down a few days ago, affirmed the decision of Justice Francis Martin in the Supreme Court refusing a temporary injunction in the action brought by William Gillette, Charles Frohman, Inc., and Alcet Enterprises, Inc., against the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and the Stoll Film Company questioning the right of the defendants to use the name "Sherlock Holmes" or "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" in connection with advertising the two-reel motion pictures on The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

Shortly after Educational began releasing "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" last spring, Nathan Burkan, representing Gillette, Charles Frohman, Inc., and Alcet Enterprises, filed a petition for a permanent injunction against Educational and the Stoll Company. It is stated, however, that the latter was never served with a summons. In August a motion was made for a temporary injunction, which was refused by Justice Martin after lengthy arguments.

It was claimed by the plaintiffs that they had the only right to the use of the name, Sherlock Holmes, through a contract made in 1897 between Conan Doyle and Charles Frohman, who died on the Lusitania in 1915.

A stage play was written by Gillette and produced in 1900 under the name "Sherlock Holmes." On the strength of this contract, which the plaintiffs claimed became the property of Charles Frohman, Inc., upon the death of Frohman, the motion picture rights were sold to Essanay in 1916 for five years. In 1921 these rights were bought for the Alcet Enterprises, and a feature motion picture was produced called "Sherlock Holmes," in which John Barrymore played the leading role.

Production work on the first series of "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" was carried on prior to this. Each of these pictures was based on one of the Conan Doyle stories, and distinctly bore its title. The contract between Frohman and Conan Doyle called for a single dramatic production. It was claimed by the defendants, therefore, that the use of "Sherlock Holmes" and "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" in advertising this series of Short Subjects in no way infringed on any rights which the plaintiffs may have had under the old contract. Fifteen two-reel pictures have been released in the series of "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes."

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., was represented by Herman Goldman, through Elkan Turk.

Excellent Cast

Pathe reports that many exhibitors who viewed the early episodes of "Haunted Valley" praised the especially strong cast supporting Ruth Roland. Jack Daugherty, a splendid horseman and athlete, has the leading male role, Larry Steers is cast as a millionaire villain with Eulalie Jensen as the "heavy woman," Francis Ford, well known to both serial and feature fans, has an important role.

First Gorham Follies

With gorgeous sets the Gorham Follies have started production on "The Folly Girl," which they are to make as a super Century Comedy.

The picture will be made along the lines of a stage production, and supporting Doris Eaton are twelve Gorham Follies girls who are known for their beauty. Two come from Chicago, two from Frisco, eight from New York and one from Des Moines.

Special Performance

Owing to the popularity of radio the Rialto Theatre, New York, put on a special show last week from 11 until 12 a. m. devoted exclusively to this subject. This performance included Bray's "The Mystery Box," released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. A Bray cartoon comedy, "Colonel Heeza Liar's Treasure Island," and another reel on radio.

Spencer's First

"Gasoline Love," the first Century Comedy featuring Fred Spencer, has been completed. It was directed by Archie Mayo. Spencer is about to begin work on "Hay Hay."

Pathe List for April 22 Headed by a Kiser Single-Reel Artfilm

Of the nine releases making up Pathe's program for April 22, the chief attraction of novelty lies in the one-reel Kiser Artfilm, "Weeping Waters," in the Oregon Trail Series. The story of this beautiful scenic is based on an Indian legend of the Oregon country.

In "Plunder's" thirteenth episode Pearl White and her lover apparently are doomed to a horrifying fate in a South American jungle where they are overcome by poisonous fumes.

"Speed the Swede," the one-reel Hal Roach comedy release starring Paul Parrott, places the hero in Stockholm. When a pretty flapper gives him a paper in Swedish, "Keep away from me. I just escaped from a pest house," he becomes the center of a panic.

Henry Cat and Farmer Al Falfa throw dice while the whole universe seems to tumble about their ears in the Aesop's Film Fable, "The Gamblers."

In Pathe Review No. 16 the new Pathecolor series deals with "The First Americans" in New Mexico. There is also an attractive novelty, "Picture Scraps." How a Japanese woman has her hair "built" is also shown.

Screen Snapshots presents an interesting galaxy of screen stars.

Every Aspect of Human Life Is Shown in Short Subjects

By Miles Gibbon
Short Subject Sales Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The success of an exhibitor depends on his ability continuously to please a high percentage of the theatre-going population of his neighborhood. This means that his programs must always offer something which will be pleasing to each of the different groups.

It is not enough to offer a well known star in, say, a light society drama. This may please a portion of the audience, but leaves an unsatisfied feeling in the minds of those who prefer heavy drama. The addition of a two-reel Western, for example one of the Range Rider Series, probably would change an ordinary program into one with a "punch," and help to insure a regular attendance. Other programs may lean the other way and require the addition of a good two-reel comedy, one of the Our Gang, for instance. Satisfying one group of patrons only will not build up a sufficiently large steady patronage to to show profit on a theatre investment. This the secret of the success of the well arranged short subject program. With its variety of individual items, well chosen, it reflects in an entertaining way nearly every familiar aspect of human life. In this way every group will feel repaid for their attendance, and develop faith in the theatre management.

The average audience is not greatly concerned with the footage of a subject. Consequently a program of five or six items is bound to give greater satisfaction than one which contains only two or three. The great popularity of vaudeville today is unquestionably due to the fact that its bills are made up of many different acts, and some portion of the audience will find something pleasing in each. And it is the same with pictures.

Unusual Endorsement Given Many Educational Releases

Fifty-four Short Subjects released by Educational are listed in the catalog of Selected Pictures issued by the National Board of Review. Seven of these Short Subjects are classified as "especially well done."

Every Educational Pictures Special released during the period is given approval. These include "The Battle of Jutland," "The Enchanted City," "How to Grow Thin," "Man vs. Beast" and "Via Radio."

Seven Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce are listed, as are eight of the "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes." Five Tony Sarg's Almanacs, eleven Christie Comedies, three Torchy Comedies, three Campbell Comedies, three Mermaid Comedies, two Hamilton Comedies, three Earl Hurd Comedies, two Toonerville Comedies, one Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge and one Selig-Rork Photoplay.

"Uneasy Feet," the latest Hamilton Comedy, is classed as "a particularly good picture" in the monthly Photoplay Guide issued by the National Committee for Better Films.

Five other Educational Pictures included in the list are "Hot Water," "Tarpon Fishing," Lyman H. Howe's "Hodge-Podge, and three Bruce films, "From the Windows of My House," "The Gray Rider" and "Mixed Trails."

Century Schedule for May

Julius and Abe Stern announce the following Century Comedy releases for May: "Oh, Nursie," on May 2, featuring Jack Cooper as a nervy insurance agent. May 9, "Why Dogs Leave Home," starring Brownie as a dog philanthropist. May 16, "Ain't Love Awful," with Bobby Dunn, Ernie Adams, Frank Earl and Lillian Hackett; a comedy of a boarding house where no cooking is allowed in the rooms. May 23, "All Over Twist," the third of the Buddy Messenger series, with Buddy working in a bakery shop; and May 30, "The Kid Reporter," in which Baby Peggy becomes managing editor of a big daily. "Why Dogs Leave Home" and "The Kid Reporter" have been placed in the selected list by the National Board of Review.

Chosen by Museum

Pathe announces that two of the series of novel presentations of art subjects filmed in co-operation with the Metropolitan Museum of Art and shown in Pathe Review have been accepted by the museum for its film archives. These are "The Vanities of Men," dealing with the dandified periods when men wore frills and knee breeches and carried handsome snuff boxes, and "Milady's Treasures," dealing with the same period and picturing historical exhibits at the museum.

Finishes Editing Chaplin Film

Sydney Chaplin has concluded the editing and titling of "Caught in a Cabaret," the second of the Keystone Comedies to be released by Oscar Price and Harry Aitken. This picture, like "Dough and Dynamite," stars Charlie Chaplin. Playing in his support are Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin, Mack Swain and the famous Keystone comedians.

Pathe Announces Stan Laurel's First

Stan Laurel has already completed three single reel comedies for Hal Roach, which will be distributed by Pathe. The first is "The Noon Whistle" which will be released soon to be followed either two or four weeks later by a travesty "Under Two Jags."

Baby Peggy Finishes Last Two-Reeler

Baby Peggy has completed "The Orphan," her last two reel Century Comedy. Her next picture will be a five-reeler to be directed by Elsie Jane Wilson (Mrs. Rupert Julian). "The Orphan" is Baby Peggy's fortieth two-reeler for Century.

Kinograms Claims Three News Beats

Kinograms, Educational's news reel, claims a beat in its April 7 issue on three subjects: The Oxford-Cambridge race, the christening of Princess Mary's son, and the winning of the Grand-National steeplechase in England by an American-owned horse.

Hal Roach Re-Engages Tom McNamara

Hal Roach has re-engaged Tom McNamara to alternate with Bob McGowan in directing the tremendously popular series of "Our Gang" two-reel comedies which are being distributed through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Shows Autos Conquering Sahara

Pathe News 28 shows what are said to be exclusive pictures of the epoch-making trip of 2,000 miles across the Sahara Desert in which gasoline caterpillar autos were employed instead of camel power.

"Easy Terms"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Compared with the others in this series of single reel Universal comedies in which Neely Edwards and Bert Roach are the principal players, there is an average amount of humor. While several of the situations will cause merriment, some are rather farfetched, and the scene where the two comedians are about to die in the electric chair when pardoned by the governor will appear to some patrons to be too gruesome to be funny.—C. S. S.

"The Gamblers"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Paul Terry has introduced his usual amount of humor and cleverness in this cartoon comedy distributed by Pathe. It starts off well with the cat tempting the other animals to shoot "craps" and will get several laughs. The moral, however, "Never Gamble in a Hen House," seems rather weak and pointless and comes as an anti-climax.—C. S. S.

"Screen Snapshots"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

In keeping with the policy upon which Screen Snapshots has built up a big patronage, this issue shows a number of prominent picture personages at home and in the studios; among them are Harold Lloyd, Ruth Roland, May McAvoy, Bebe Daniels, Mary Miles Minter, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Colleen Moore, Bull Montana, Dinky Dean, Chuck Reisner and Dorothy Phillips.—C. S. S.

"Weeping Waters"

(Pathe—Scenic—Drama—One Reel)

An old Indian legend furnishes the basis for this number of the Kiser Artfilm series of single reel pictures distributed by Pathe. Basically a scenic, while there are several pretty shots, neither from a standpoint of beauty or photography is it particularly notable. The Indian legend which supplies the title seems lacking in force and does not add essentially to the appeal. As a whole, this reel does not measure up to the standard of the others of the series from a standpoint of audience interest.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 16

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

As usual, there are several items of interest in this Pathe Review. However, the selection of subjects does not arouse as great an amount of interest as some of the recent numbers. This issue contains a novelty that will mystify a number of spectators, consisting of the piecing together of irregular scraps so that they make complete motion pictures. Other sections show the homes of the early cliff dwellers in New Mexico and a section that will interest the women showing how a Japanese woman of high caste has her hair "built" so that it will last for a long time.—C. S. S.

"The Barnyard"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)

Larry Semon has invested his latest comedy with a full measure of slapstick but with a less degree of originality than usual. It is fast entertainment of the slambang variety. Plenty of whitewash and black paint and spectacular tumbling are there. But a great deal of the material recalls what has been often done before. Some of the best effects show a chick getting drunk, a pair of trick shoes that move all about the barn by themselves, and a lively automobile-aeroplane race at the close. The fact that there is an abundance of fast action should put it over. M. K.

"All Over Twist"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Buddy Messinger is the star of this Century comedy distributed by Universal. Its greatest appeal will be to children. After the first few hundred feet, the action quickens to a rapid pace when Buddy is set to work in a kitchen and gets in trouble with the chef. There is considerable slapstick and many improbable but ludicrous situations which indicate considerable ingenuity and cleverness on the part of the director. —C. S. S.

"Speed the Swede"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

In this single reel Pathe Comedy, Paul Parrott is cast as an American in Sweden who gets into all sorts of trouble because he persists in trying to get everyone he sees to translate a message a girl has given him which says "Keep away from me, I just escaped from the pest house." A not altogether pleasant subject, however, several situations have been introduced which will bring laughs from the average Parrott fan.—C. S. S.

"Roving Thomas in Banff"

(Vitagraph—Scenic—One Reel)

Mountain scenery during the winter season is beautifully photographed here. Roving Thomas, the cartoon cat, takes a survey of the gala snow sports. Hiking parties, tobogganing and skating provide some exhilarating entertainment. M. K.

"Cold Chills"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This offers hilarious entertainment. Louise Fazenda at her funniest and unusually effective slapstick make this a great laughing success. She plays a Swedish maid who gets into a house of many strange and exciting effects. Every bit of the picture is funny. The first part shows the girl on the steamer just before landing. Here a collapsible stairway causes no end of ludicrous accidents. Her acrobatic style of plunging in and out of scenes is screamingly funny. The titles are excellent. The comedy is a Mermaid, produced by Jack White. M. K.

"The Fourflusher"

(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

Joe Roberts is the stalwart comedian in this Fox burlesque on fake royalty. He plays a penniless count traveling in society. There is much that furnishes good amusement as the comedy has been well directed. His attempts at proving he is a fine shot and later the cafe scenes will bring plenty of laughs. Most of it is rather robust comedy but there are subtle touches that are most effective. M. K.

'Schooldays in Japan'

Fox—Educational—One Half Reel)

Descriptive entertainment that should please anyone is packed into this short subject by Fox. The types are intelligent, the costumes picturesque and the material has been selected with a regard for what is universally interesting. M. K.

"Wild Waters"

(Fox—Educational—Half Reel)

This gives one an astonishing idea of the heighth and breadth of the Iguazu Falls in South America. The scenes have great beauty and power. For the benefit of those who like to know statistics, interesting measurements and comparisons are stated in the subtitles.—M. K.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Up Against—What?

G. W. Ward, projectionist Columbia City Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana, very evidently is not enamored of the exchange "service" (???) he g?e?t?s?. He strings words together as follows:

What I have to say may not be of much interest to you, but at least will give you an idea as to what the projectionist of the better class theatre in towns from 3,000 to 4,000 are up against.

I have been a constant reader of the department, and of your articles in other sections of the World, for nearly ten years.

Both that and your handbooks, which every projectionist should have, have been of great help to me.

Started as operator in 1909, which was in the days of the store-room theatre, at least in the smaller towns. The "booth" was, as you know, a rude affair, equipped with one projector and usually one stereopticon, a rheostat or Compensarc, a rewinder and one poor print.

Since then time has worked great changes in projection equipment in the small towns, but there has been no change in the condition of the films we receive from some exchanges, which can compare with the change in equipment and in the projectionist himself.

How's This for Equipment?

I am projectionist of the Columbia Theatre, here in Columbia City, which is a town of 3,500. The theatre is owned by the Columbia City Theatre Company and represents an investment of about $55,000. It is modern throughout, seats 700, has Typhoon cooling system, rest room, toilets, is steam heated and has a pipe organ.

Projection room is 16 x 16 x 12 feet. In it are two Type S Simplex projectors, one General Electric 100-ampere generator and one 50-ampere Hertner Transverter for emergency use. We have Peerless arc controls. (Suppose some of you city exhibitors "once over" that line of equipment—in a town of 3,500!!!—Ed.) I use 6½ meniscus collector and an 8½ bi-convex converging lens. Carbons are ⅞ and ⅝ Columbia. Use 70 to 80 amperes at arc. Project a 16-foot picture at 122 feet on a Minusa Gold Fibre screen.

Believe we have as good a picture as can be shown by any theatre in this State where the conditions are similar. Would appreciate any advice you may offer for improvement of the equipment.

To prove my contention as to condition of prints (films) I have a record of everything I have run since January 1, 1921. I never show a picture to an audience until I have first inspected it, but who wants to do from one to five hours exchange inspector work without pay, especially when one knows the manager pays for films in good mechanical condition—condition to project?

Should you see fit to publish this you are at liberty to use my name, if you wish. Might add that the only way to overcome this condition is for theatre managers to refuse to take service (?) from exchanges which will not supply prints in good condition.

Ward Is Correct

Brother Ward is entirely correct and it is amazing to me that exhibitors will tamely submit to the imposition of paying for shows and merely receiving something which may possibly be made into a show by expending several hours labor in putting it into projectionable shape.

An examination of the table submitted will disclose a total of 63 mis-frames and 674 splices eliminated from 239 subjects which were presumed to be in first class shape for projection when received.

Film rental presumes the goods to be in good condition, or at least a condition so that an acceptable show may be put on the screen immediately upon receipt of the films.

Yet you will observe that after all the work this man put in inspecting and repairing, his show was stopped 19 times because of faults in the films themselves.

This is an outrage on the exhibitor and on his audience. It is selling something and not delivering the goods.

As to commenting on your equipment, in order to comment on your optical line-up it is necessary that I have three things, viz: AN IMPRESSION OF YOUR CRATER, THE SMALLEST FREE DIAMETER OF YOUR PROJECTION LENSES AND THE WORKING DISTANCE OF PROJECTION LENS.

In order to make an impression of your crater, select about three good carbon stubs—stubs with good, well defined craters, making certain that they be craters in which the core is perfect. Lay a sheet of soft, white paper on an ordinary blotter and press the crater on the paper with an oscillating movement, so as to get a clear, undisturbed impression of the edge, or rim of the crater. Make impressions of about three craters. All may be on the same sheet of paper, of course.

Given this and the smallest free diameter and working distance of your projection lens, I am in position to tell you exactly what you need, EXCEPT that if you have a high intensity arc, mention that fact, though the crater impression will disclose that fact pretty accurately. It is well to mention it, however.

Send me this data and I will get busy. At a guess I would say that you are all right if your projection lens diameter is pretty close to 2½ inches (rear combination) and your rotating shutter is at the aerial image and trimmed down properly. But that is merely a guess, mind you.

Clever Stunts

Julius Griem, an old department fan, Appleton, Wisconsin, describes stunts which I am sure will be of real value to many. He says:

Inclosed find six dollars, for which send me the Bluebook of Projection. KNOWING THE VALUE OF THE THREE PREVIOUS EDITIONS I WOULD NOT MISS THIS THE NEW ONE EVEN THOUGH THE PRICE WERE FIFTEEN DOLLARS.

Well, friend Richardson, I have been a reader of the department ever since the days of the old pink covered Moving Picture World. Have received much benefit and guess it is about time I was giving something in return.

Fade-in Splices

Here is a thing I have found to be very practical for locating the frame line when making splices in fade-in or fade-outs:

Take an upper or lower sprocket—an old one will do—and a piece of film in which the frame lines (lines between pictures) show plainly. Place the film on the sprocket and you will find the frame line to come between two of its teeth. With a file or sharp-pointed instrument make a straight line across the end of the sprocket.

Without disturbing the film, turn the sprocket until the next dividing line appears. Make another line across the end of sprocket.

You will now find you have the end of the sprocket marked as per drawing. When you have a splice to make in a fade-in or fade-out, place the marked sprocket on the film back where the frame lines are visible and run it along to the break, and where a sprocket line falls there the dividing line will be.

To facilitate this operation, get a rod of iron, as near the size of the hole in the sprocket as you can. Attach it to the wall so it will stick out over and between the two reels on the rewinder. You now have but to place your broken film on the sprocket, thus conveniently located, and pull it (the film) along until the desired point is reached.

To Find Mis-Frames, Etc.

A most excellent way to locate mis-frames or other faults which are found when projecting is to cut a lot of papers about 1½ by ½ inches. Punch a small hole in one end and hang them on a conveniently located nail on the wall, close to the projector. When a fault you will wish to located when rewinding comes along, grab a paper, moisten (not wet) it with the tongue and let it wind into the film roll of lower reel, the end sticking out, of course. When rewinding the fault will be found about four or five feet beyond the paper, if you have worked fast in putting the paper in.

A Scraper

Those using Simplex projectors who have an old trap shoe may make an excellent film scraper by grinding one end down like a chisel. The other side may be used as a straight edge when scraping splices.

Set an old plan convex condenser in your rewind table, with a 15-watt lamp under it, and you will have a mighty fine patching light—far better than a plain glass, or at least I think so.

This is good. Brother Griem supplies what is analogous to "shop kinks," and darned good ones, too, if you ask me. The telling of these little things has cost him nothing but a small effort. It has injured him just exactly not at all; it will help many.

If more of you got rid of the idea that you gain anything by hugging to your selfish breast some little stunt you have learned, on the theory that you are very wonderful because you know something nobody else knows, things would be much better for you and for every one else.

In the name of us all, I thank Brother Griem for the things he has described—especially the fade-in splice stunt, which I recommend projectionists to install over their rewinder, pronto. You won't use it often, but when you do need it you need it BAD.

From Norway

Eivind Jorgensen, Eugene P. Roken, Norway, ordered a Bluebook of Projection—Fourth Edition of Handbook. I was surprised, recently, to receive a very well bound book of magnificent views of Norway, followed shortly by a letter which reads as follows:

Having finished a work the artist always feels anxious to learn the reviews and comments concerning his creation. I can imagine that you are in a similar state of mind with regard to your new work, the "Bluebook of Projection." I believe every one of those who have benefited by your works should send you some sign of appreciation, hence these lines to tell you my opinion of the Bluebook; also the book of views on my country, which I mean as a special greeting to you from one of your most grateful readers.

The Bluebook

As to the Bluebook, a distinct feature is the endeavor you have made to make things plain. Technical terms are given a clear and understandable explanation or definition, so that they are readily assimilated by the reader.

It is also obvious that you try to inspire the projectionist with a love for this work—to do it right and realize his importance in the successful presentation of the picture to the audience, consequently their duty to not injure or destroy the work of directors and actors who have endeavored to put their best in the films.

I venture the assertion that if every theatre manager would co-operate according to your advice it would very soon be a joy to visit the picture theatre. There would be no more rainy, oily, dim or shaky pictures, or silly stunts due to wrong projection speed.

The Bluebook deserves to have a widespread circulation, and to have its contents applied universally.

Personally I compare your book with a friendly experienced teacher whom I may consult whenever I like, who will always give a plain answer to any question I may care to ask. There is neither need to be or excuse for being ignorant on projection matters with Richardson's Bluebook at hand.

In closing let me express to you my sincere congratulations and my best wishes.

I Thank You

As a general proposition I do not accept presents, but there could not possibly be any reason for the gift, other than that expressed in this case, so I have the book home and thank you cordially for it. The views are splendid. How I wish I might see that ruggedly magnificent scenery.

I thank you also for your kindly spoken words of appreciation of the book I worked so hard for three long years to make as valuable as possible. It is not perfect. Nothing human ever is, I think, but the Bluebook is nevertheless a work of which I feel a bit proud, and it is more pleasant than you can know to receive letters such as yours.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies by mail on matter which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through our department remit one dollar.

To Shirley

P. A. Wills, projectionist, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois, offers the following suggestions with regard to E. K. Shirley's (Homer, La.) trouble, March 10 issue. Brother Wills says:

With regard to E. K. Shirley's troube with out-of-focus effect, the following may help. He says his projection lens is not loose, either in whole or in part, but perhaps the projector mechanism itself has jarred loose.

Insufficient tension on one side of aperture will also cause such a trouble, and with the Simplex the proper tension is not always in effect unless the film trap gate is pulled back tight. It is also possible his whole projector might be loose on the floor.

Those are, however, mere suggestions of possible causes. The most probable seat of his difficulyt is that friend Shirley has recently cleaned his projection lens elements, inside surfaces and all, and that while they looked perfectly clean when reassembled, there was a thin, invisible coating of dirt or oil.

Clean Lenses Again

Clean the lenses again, using some combination of alcohol, such as one-third ammonia. This will cut the oil from the lens.

The reason for the effect named is that changes in temperature, when coating is present, will cause a fogging of the lens.

This may sound foolish, but, all the same, I had exactly that same trouble and stopped it by cleaning the lenses with an alcohol-ammonia solution.

Frankly, I am skeptical, but one never can tell. If there be a coating of oil, no matter how thin, the definition of the lens would be injured ALL the time.

Moisture might and would do it, but moisture would, or should, soon be expelled. Well, anyhow, we thank Brother Wills for his suggestions; also perhaps he is right. No harm trying what he suggests, anyhow.

By the way, what Wills presumably means is the ordinary household ammonia. Why the ammonia, however? Alcohol cuts grease. I think half alcohol (wood or denatured) and half water is just as good.

Long Distance Invite

From Local Union 162, Motion Picture Projectionists I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., came an invitation to be present at their Nineteenth Anniversary, March 27, Movies Hall, in the City of the Golden Gate

B. M. Knobloch, F. M. Billingsley and George Johnson were the Committee in Charge.

Would have enjoyed being there and wiggling the hand of old friends, or friends of the old days, such as "Pop" Woods, Dolliver, Walter Preddy and others, but three thousand miles is too far to walk and if I rode Nancy Hanks I might need runners on her before we arrived. As for the railways—why one has to buy one every time one travels, and they're expensive.

Many thanks for the invitation, though. Hope you hadda real good time.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Butte, Seattle, Add to Rest Room Record

WE surely started something when we began publishing illustrations and descriptions of the manner in which picture theatre rest rooms are made attractive. Caught five in this week's haul but, unfortunately, only two of 'em came across with ocular demonstrations of just how good they were.

It looks to us as if there should be some business for an energetic photographer of interiors before we get through the list.

While there are but three motion picture theatres in the so-called Capital District of New York State, comprising the cities of Albany, Schenectady and Troy, which have rest rooms in the fullest sense of the word, the owners and managers of other houses are free to admit that rest rooms today play an important part in theatre construction, and no doubt, play a part also toward attracting and retaining patronage.

Many owners and managers were equally free in admitting that were they to construct a theatre today, that rest rooms would command fully as much attention as other features of the house. In the Capital District, there are but few houses which have been constructed within the last two or three years, but the more modern ones, such as the Mark Strand, in Albany, the State in Schenectady, and the Troy, in Troy, all owned and operated by the Strand circuit, are equipped with rest rooms which offer the last word in comfort and convenience.

In Albany's Mark Strand

At the Mark Strand in Albany, a house which probably represents an investment of $400,000, and which ranks foremost among the theatres of the city, the dominant tone in the rest room for women is of gray. The room is located off the mezzanine floor and is perhaps twenty-five feet square.

Not only is the rug in gray effect, but the walls are covered with a contrasting gray, presenting a restful effect, and at the same time one that is in accordance with the general program of comfort. The room is equipped with two or three paintings, with a long pier glass, with lights at either side, a dressing table, three or four chairs also in gray, while a floor lamp in one corner of the room gives an added touch to the homelike appearance.

A matron is in charge. She occupies a small room leading from the rest room proper.

The men's rest room occupies a section also leading off from the mezzanine floor, the dimensions are twenty by twenty feet, the paneled side walls being of imitation mahogany. The floor is of tile and the room is furnished with a divan and lounging chairs.

What Director Hill Says

"I believe that the rest room is today of utmost importance to the motion picture theatre, playing as it does daily, to thousands upon thousands of persons," said Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany, as well as the Troy, in Troy. "Our rest rooms offer both comfort and convenience to our patrons, and I give them my personal attention every day.

"I think that the time is coming when every motion picture theatre, small or large, in this country, will give more than ordinary attention to providing rest rooms, rather than some of the present dingy holes in the wall, which to my mind coincide with the motion picture as it was presented ten years ago.

"Our theatres must keep pace with the splendid advance which is being made today in the pictures which are offered to our patrons. You can not expect a company to present a picture involving months of effort and thought, and an expense running often to a million or more, and then find that it is being shown in a house which is far behind the times as the pictures themselves were eight or nine years ago, when compared to present day productions."

At the Troy

At the Troy Theatre, the ladies' rest room is one of the most handsome rooms in the entire theatre, being in a delft blue, the sidewalls being in a handsome figured tapestry. The rug is in the same color scheme. The sidelights are in a clouded effect, the fixtures of silver forming a most pleasing contrast to the blue. The room is equipped with mirrors, dressing tables and chairs, with a matron in charge. The Troy represents an investment of about $400,000.

At Schenectady's State

At the State, in Schenectady, which was opened only last December, and which is by far the largest and most elaborate of the group, and which cost probably close to $600,000, particular attention has been paid to the rest rooms, with the result that they are in strict accordance with the elaborate features which characterize the house throughout.

The women's rest room in its gray tones, and its furniture, presents a pleasing appearance to the eye, and at the same time carries with it all that is required in not only convenience to the patrons, but also in the way of luxury itself. As at the Troy and Mark Strand, the manager of the State, Edwin O. Weinberg, was free in admitting that the rest rooms have played a prominent part in attracting and retaining the patronage which the house enjoys.

But do not become imbued with the idea that the big Eastern houses have any monopoly on the attractive rest room. Out in Butte, Montana, and Seattle, Washington, is a mighty good pair to draw to when filling one's hand.

Butte Rialto a Model House

The Rialto of Butte is under the management of W. J. Sullivan, and is one of the chain theatres belonging to Jensen and Von Herberg, who have theatres in Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Yakima, Bremerton, Great Falls and Wenatchee. Undoubtedly this theatre is one of the model theatres in the State and at the present time the management is contemplating refurnishing the loges, rest rooms and waiting rooms.

The first floor has the advantage of being free of steps, being practically on a level with the street and the entrance is only a slight incline. This incline continues to the several arches leading to the various aisles of the big auditorium, which has a seating capacity of 1,400.

The reception halls are beautifully carpeted with a heavy moquette in the French gray with a thread of black and the heavy velour portieres are of the same shade; these with the hangings are lined with a soft old rose.

Gorgeous paintings and framed tapestries adorn the walls. Some of these are portraits and others portray some of nature's scenic wonderlands. All are framed in the dull gold.

Along the inclined hallway, between the first floor and the balcony are the women's and men's waiting rooms and rest rooms. These open directly from the hallway by open arches, slightly railed, and at intervals there are newel posts crowned with shaded electric lights. The rooms are arranged en suite with the solid wall partition between the suites.

The Women's Suite

The women's suite consists of a general waiting room, winged by two other rooms, namely a writing room and a lounge that opens directly into the tiled and marble panneled rest room of which there are four booths with walls of Alaska marble and swinging shutter doors of oak.

At the end of the elongated tiled room is the lavatory. A large window together with the air shafts provide good ventilation. The porcelain bowls, sanitary stands or drinking fountains and plumbing are of the best and kept in a perfectly sanitary condition at all times. The tiled floor is of the hit or miss pattern in the gray and black.

A colored maid, in a black frock with dainty white apron, white cuffs and a white lace bordered cap is the attendant, who keeps the entire suites absolutely immaculate.

The floor covering in the suites is the heavy moquette in the French gray with a conventional design of black. The touch of black is highly artistic. The general sitting room is furnished with several wicker arm chairs, two settees, two wicker library tables and several ottomans.

One wall has a French bevelled mirror its full width with a height approximately of six feet. Over this mirror hangs a large portrait painting of Norma Talmadge. From the centre of the ceiling are suspended four clustered lights dropped from bronze chains, the lights being dimmed by the semi-transparent globes. One floor lamp, with a large old rose silk shade stands at the end of the room.

Well Equipped Waiting Room

The tables are covered with brightly figured cretonnes and protected with the heavy plate glass. The chairs are cushioned in old blue velour.

The writing room is equipped with six wicker desks, chairs to match and a few small stools. Each desk is covered with the gay cretonne and again with the plate glass.

Small crystal electric table lamps adorn each desk and each has a shade of old rose with fringe of iridescent beads.

There is a desk telephone for the use of the patrons. Across the length of the room is a wall mirror. Besides the desk lamps there are the side wall candelabra of bronze with small old rose shades.

The lounge, situated between the rest room proper and the general waiting room, is furnished with wicker sofa, six easy wicker chairs, two triple mirrored dressing tables and one round table, and a pedestal drinking fountain.

Suitable waste paper baskets are in all of the rooms. The dressing tables have table lamps and lighting fixtures similar to the other rooms. The chairs throughout are cushioned with cretonne or velour.

Upholstered in Cretonne

The couch pad and the pillows are of cretonne to blend with the covers of all the tables and the chairs. The drapes and portieres are of heavy blue gray velour. Pictures are features of the suites. They are large and all are framed in the old dull gold finish. The subjects are as follows: An Auburn Beauty by Louis Rodman; Daughter of Italy by Galenza; Capri by F. Catana; Lake Como by F. Catana and a portrait of Norma Talmadge.

Dimensions of the rooms are as follows: Waiting room, 14x14; lounge, 14x14 writing room, 12x12;, with the rest room approximately 10x18.

The men's waiting room is furnished with ten wicker loge chairs and a table. It is well lighted by bronze wall candelabra and also has the same center lighting fixtures that the other suites have.

The rest room is quite similar. The approximate cost of furnishings as above given is $1,200. The carpeting in all the rooms of the suites is in the gray moquette and the walls of the rough finish are decorated in French gray.

At Seattle's Strand

The ladies' rest room of the Strand Theatre, Seattle, is in keeping with the rest of the house, rather more formal than intimate, and developed in contrasts that provide a harmony of their own.

The floor is covered with a black velvet carpet. Walls of a two tone green and brown give a bronzed effect.

A moulding of gold and violet sets this off from a pale green ceiling. Columns support the doorway arches at either side leading down steps to a main promenade and lounge. The tops of these columns are elaborated with gold and violet, and wall candelabra in pairs, are violet tinted with silken shades in gold and violet effect.

Curtains and over drapes are of a handsome tapestry effect, with valances of black velvet with conventional fruit designs and gold borders over the window arches. Night curtains of a formal design are raised to an effective height to reveal ornate stained glass windows.

The furniture is in the main ivory, with novelty crude color trimming, with a suite of novelty wicker furniture in bright color effects. A floor lamp, handsome screen, and a profusion of growing plants and a fernery soften the crudeness of the color effects, giving on the whole a pleasing atmosphere.

The room is large with several long mirrors. Canary birds in handsome wicker cages add to the attractiveness.

A Small Investment That May Save Thousands

In a few minutes fire can destroy your theatre and equipment. This means a serious loss. You may be insured, but with the high cost of material and labor insurance seldom covers the cost of replacement. Then, too, a fire means no performances and your patrons go to some other house.

Your theatre and its equipment are worth protecting. Fire protection is a small investment that may save you thousands. Have the means at hand to put out any fire. Put out a fire when it is small and it cannot spread and cause damage or a panic.

Your supply dealer can furnish you with Pyrene fire and safety appliances or write us direct for catalogues.

Where Portability Counts

HALLBERG PORTABLE PROJECTOR AND FEATHERWEIGHT ELECTRIC PLANT

made it possible in the far North for Mr. Flaherty to see the picture almost immediately after taking it.

Here is what he says about it—

"The plant had to stand unusually hard knocks during transport to the North and back to civilization again over 1,600 miles by canoe, river scows and coast wise schooners, and came through without damage of any kind.

"It was absolutely necessary to print and project my films as I made them and your plant on account of its light weight and reliability made it all possible."

Let us tell you more about it. Write today.

FISHER PRODUCTIONS

VICTOR B. FISHER

Supervising Director

"The Superlative in Motion Pictures"

Executives of wide motion picture experience will direct the destinies of this concern.

Authors of repute, directors who are leaders in their line, stars whose names—and abilities—are recognized the world over, will contribute their best effort and talent to the pictures bearing the Fisher name and trade-mark.

Three (3) productions a year will be made.

So far as expenditure of time, money and human endeavor can make them, these photo-classics will be masterpieces of screen art.

They will be aimed to more than satisfy the great army of motion picture lovers.

Hence they will embody every element tending to create—and maintain—sure-fire box-office attraction.

FISHER PRODUCTIONS will be a synonym, not for better pictures, but for the BEST pictures,—always.

The industry, and the public, in each Fisher screen creation, will be assured of a promise fulfilled.

What the Exhibitor Says:

"Large attendance warranted extension of Charles Ray's 'The Girl I Loved' for another week's run."–Gifts Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Good business all week without extra exploitation."–Allen Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

" 'The Girl I Loved' is one of Charles Ray's good ones and our audiences liked it. Business good."–Middle West Exhibitor in M. P. News.

What the Expert Says:

" 'The Girl I Loved' is a production that any audience should like," says Exhibitors' Herald. "Sympathetic, humorous action and genuine appeal portrayed in what is probably Charles Ray's best work for the screen. Don't fail to see this production. We believe it is one you will like, and as such one you will want to pass along to your patrons. Ray's acting is an outstanding and memorable feature. He has a part that calls for the highest form of suppressed emotion."

MASTERS OF MEN—
from MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Vivid and vital and rich in its patriotic glow is 'Masters of Men,' which is sponsored by Vitagraph—a picture which this company may well feel proud of since it carries all the qualities which mark success. In the first place it is an adaptation of a vigorous story by Morgan Robertson and features a character study of a young American who found romance and adventure in his search for his soul. In fact the picture presents a double romance, plenty of conflict, a climax which moves with effective dramatic force.

"It contains all the essentials which provide good screen material.

"The picture carries a punch, dramatic flavor, romantic interest, atmosphere and fine acting.

"It is a box-office bet, realistic and sure-fire in its appeal."

"A Big Punch!"

Here's what the Newspaper Reviewers say of it

WELL WORTH WHILE

"A picture worth while with novelty of theme. There's a big punch when a bursting dam floods a valley."

—Cincinnati Times-Star.

YOU'LL LIKE IT

"You are going to like this one—it is so human. John Bowers has done one of the biggest pieces of dramatic interpretation of his career. Marguerite De La Motte lends unusual appeal to her role. Milton Sills is excellent. The climax is a thriller."

—Omaha World-Herald.

AN EYE-OPENER

"Filled with dramatic moments, with clever comedy relief. The climax is an eye-opener. A modern drama of western America in which Marguerite De La Motte, Milton Sills and John Bowers do splendid work."

—Omaha Bee.

PLENTY OF THRILLS

"An interesting story with plenty of thrills, including a cattle stampede, a fall from dizzy heights, the spectacular breaking of a great dam and the struggle for life of two men caught in the raging water. Enacted with finished skill."

—Denver Times.

FULL OF ZEST

"A tempestuous production, dealing with a popular theme. Very interesting. The story is well put together and enacted by a most capable cast. A very realistic and well achieved breaking of a dam adds zest."

—Rocky Mountain News.

The Great American Heart Drama!

"I'll play you the game," she said, "for his life and mine. Straight poker—two out of three show-down."

Ramerrez, the wounded bandit, the man she loved, lay at her feet.

Rance, the gambling sheriff, who loved her, was waiting to turn him over to a posse.

"I hate you, but I'll marry you if I lose," said the girl. "Are you game?"

"You and the cards have got into my blood," he laughed. "I'll take you up."

The game was on. One winning hand for the girl of the golden west.

Another deal. The sheriff won.

"Even, now—we're even. It's the next hand that tells," said Rance.

"Cut," interjected the girl.

Each sat tense, silent, inscrutable.

The sheriff picked up his hand and laughed. "I had a feelin' I'd win," he said, and threw down—three kings.

Dumb, pale as death, she reached slowly for her cards. With a catch of her breath she threw them on the table face up, and saw—

A situation that will stir the blood of every man and woman who lives.

"The GIRL of the GOLDEN WEST"

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

CANDIDATES are appearing for the honor and glory of leading the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and with the candidates are coming the usual cross fire statements.

The annual song—played as the convention date approaches—goes something like this:

"You said it." "I didn't." "You did." "You're a liar." "You're another."

And those to whose interest a weakened exhibitor organization is desirable chuckle with glee.

Moving Picture World has a confession to make. Possibly an apology.

Our columns are open to the statements of any candidate or his friends regarding his own qualifications, our space is clear for the discussion of the exhibitor problems that will come up in Chicago—

But we have placed the soft pedal on the recriminations, the charges and the counter charges.

If that be a fault—we confess it.

THE newspaper code places under the heading of "News" anything that "makes interesting reading." Possibly it is our place to abandon judgment and discretion when it comes to serving the news.

The pot calling the kettle black, or good men impugning each other's motives, may constitute interesting reading.

But it is our conviction that a trade paper must take a broader view of the interests of its readers, and be aware of the point at which the best interests of a field are endangered by "interesting reading."

And it is our further conviction that most of our readers feel an approaching nausea as they survey columns of slurs and billingsgate that can only hamper constructive intelligent organization and hearten those who prefer a disintegrated theatre owners' body.

Politics we must have. Politics is human nature.

But trade politics can be lively, interesting, snappy—and still constructive.

CHARLES LEE HYDE, of the Grand Theatre, Pierre, So. Dakota, comes to bat with an interesting experiment that might also be of value to exhibitors in many other communities.

Mr. Hyde has rented his theatre for the Sundays of the year to the First Congregational Church of that town. The church presents selected moving pictures from ordinary distributing channels.

From the minister's point of view the experiment is a success. In Mr. Hyde's words: "It is the most interesting and best attended church service in town. It has a real religious atmosphere and is drawing an attendance over seven hundred every Sunday night in a town of three thousand, with several other churches in opposition."

This after a six month trial.

THEATRE men will be more interested in the results of the experiment from the exhibitor's point of view. And here many a small town man can read between the lines into his own situation.

Mr. Hyde declares:

"I feel it is a real step forward. People get interested in pictures who have never seen them before. They get the impression that the best lessons and thoughts are expressed in our daily run of pictures.

"The church uses many second run pictures that I have previously shown.

"It gives the people of the town the feeling that my theatre is their theatre. I give up the profits of my Sunday business but more than make expenses and have the satisfaction of seeing my house crowded every Sunday together with the feeling that I am helping along something that is really doing the community a lot of good.

"I believe that this get-together plan is much better than having a feeling of antagonism between the Sunday theatre and the best people of a community. Even the churches of the town that do not take part in this service feel more friendly to me than they did when I ran a paid show on Sunday night."

Costume Play a Success If Drama Is Real, Says Schenck

THE day is not far off, according to Joseph M. Schenck, whose pictures are distributed through First National, when the bigger feature will enjoy much the same privileges as the legitimate stage show—an indefinite run for as long a period as it is able to draw. This will be true, believes Mr. Schenck, not only in a few instances, but in every large city, with every production which is worthy of longer runs. The producer decried the fact that short runs only are accorded the picture which could easily draw for a much longer period.

Mr. Schenck is in New York en route to the convention of Associated First National which will be held next week in Atlantic City. Following this he will return to the Coast to supervise the production of "Ashes of Vengeance," starring Norma Talmadge under the direction of Frank Lloyd, concerning which he holds forth the prophecy that it will be the biggest picture in his entire career as a producer.

In discussing the type of picture which proves most popular, Mr. Schenck belittled the idea of "cycles of picture." "First and foremost," he stated, "the public wants entertainment—regardless of the type of the story, or the period in which it is laid. 'Ashes of Vengeance' is a costume play—a tale of France in the sixteenth century, but I selected it not because it was a costume story, but rather because the drama is so poignant. For economic reasons a producer should not attempt a period picture unless he is assured of the possibilities for drama and romance.

"The reason costume pictures were unsuccessful at one time was because they were poorly made, with mediocre stories and uninspired directors and casts. With a hundred per cent cast, story and director, the costume picture has infinitely more possibilities for colorful adventure and romance than a story laid in the present day."

"Ashes of Vengeance," Mr. Schenck announced, will be a super-special. In the spectacular ballroom scenes which were filmed this week six hundred extras, dressed in the colorful uniforms and costumes of the period, will appear. The big street scene, which will show the massacre of St. Bartholomew's eve was scheduled for filming the later part of this week.

Supporting Miss Talmadge in the stellar role will be seen Conway Tearle, who perfected himself in the art of swordsmanship before the first scene could be shot; Josephine Crowell, who will enact the role of Catherine de Medici; Betty Francisco, Claire McDowell, Courtney Foote, James Colley, Andre de Berenger, Boyd Irwin, Winter Hall, William Clifford, Murdock McQuarrie, Hector V. Sarno, Earl Schenck, Lucy Beaumont.

In commenting upon the star system, Mr. Schenck believes that while it is possible for a producer to lessen a star's popularity by mediocre directors, inferior casts and poorly chosen stories, it is equally as impossible for him to create a star. "This is the public's job," stated the producer, "and they do it very thoroughly. Once they have enthroned their favorites, then it is possible for the producer to co-operate. So long as the producer is willing to make big and fine pictures with this selected few, these stars will remain."

Organization Launched

Directors Expect It to Have Far-reaching Influence

The Motion Picture Chamber of Commerce of America (Non-Theatrical) was formally launched on Monday evening, April 9, at the club rooms, 55 West 44th Street, when a dinner-conference adopted a constitution proposed by a committee of five, consisting of William R. Kelley, Arthur James, Edward P. Earl, George Zehrung and F. S. Wythe.

Sidney Morse, director of the bureau of social and educational service of the Masonic Grand Lodge, presided, and defined the new organization as "an organization of all non-theatrical interests in the motion picture industry, whether producers, distributors, or users of non-theatrical films, and whether for educational, scientific, industrial, commercial, or entertainment purposes; also makers of projectors, films or accessories."

One of the first tasks of the newly organized Chamber will be to institute a nation-wide campaign for the repeal of restrictive and burdensome legislation, such as that which the Steingut bill aims to eliminate in New York.

The Chamber will also consider plans for improved methods of distribution through some form of co-operative effort.

Forty-five organizations took part in the organization meeting.

Vignola Due Soon

Robert G. Vignola will arrive in New York from his five months' world tour on April 27, according to cable advices received from him this week by Arthur M. Brilant, his personal representative. Until his apartment is set in order he will make his temporary home at the New York Athletic Club of which he is a prominent and active member.

Vote on Daylight Saving Is Barred in Baltimore

A BOMBSHELL exploded in the camp of the moving picture exhibitors of Baltimore, Md., and others opposed to daylight saving, on Monday evening, April 16, when it was announced that according to a ruling handed down by Assistant Attorney General Lindsay C. Spencer the daylight saving ordinance could not be placed on the ballot for people to vote on at the coming election on May 8.

The whole point upon which the decision rests is that according to the constitution of the State of Maryland all legislation for Baltimore city must be produced by the city council and the council cannot "pass the buck" to the people or give them a chance to vote on a measure such as this, unless: First, there is a petition requesting it be voted upon signed by 10,000 people; or, second, unless the legislature authorizes a vote to be taken upon it by a special act.

As the ballots will go to the printer on April 25, it leaves very little time for the forces desiring the matter to go before the people to act.

One can readily understand now why those in favor of the measure have been so delinquent in starting their campaign to urge people to vote for the measure.

While they may not have known that the question would be raised, they have kept particularly quiet and the forces opposed to the measure have been waging a decided warfare with their meetings in the moving picture theatres throughout the city.

Every facility for testing the ruling before the date on which the ballots will go to the printer will be given those who desire to do so, it has been announced from the Attorney General's office.

Frank W. Lawson, secretary of the Association Opposed to Daylight Saving, which the moving picture men and others are backing, said: "The announcement that the Attorney General's office had ruled that the daylight saving referendum could not appear on the ballot was a great disappointment to us.

"I am confident that the proposed ordinance would have been defeated at the polls by an overwhelming majority and it seems decidedly unfair to rob the people of the opportunity to voice their decision through the ballot. But if the move means a fight against it in the City Council we are prepared to make the same hard fight there."

Tribute for Ray

Charles Ray recently received a high tribute when twenty-four judges of the Federal and California Superior courts assembled at his studios and gave him an engrossed testimonial. In this they thanked him for the invariably high character of his photoplays, and especially his selection of "The Courtship of Myles Standish" for his next picture.

Specials of Several Companies Are Doing a Record Business

By ROGER FERRI

WITH the advent of the spring and summer off-season for legitimate attractions, owners of theatres in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston and other large cities are offering the tenancy of those houses to producers of special productions. It is certain that virtually all of the big 1923-24 super specials will be given premiere showings on Broadway during the next six months. The Shuberts have set almost prohibitive rentals on their Broadway houses, but have come down on their original figures.

Fox Film Corporation, as in past seasons, will introduce most of its big pictures of next year at Broadway and Chicago Loop theatres. There are several deals pending now, involving the Lyric and Forty-fourth Street theatres in New York. The Cosmopolitan (Hearst) interests will use the Cosmopolitan (formerly the Park in Columbus Circle) and the Central, a Shubert house, for their premieres. It is believed that "Little Old New York," Marion Davies' next special, will officially open the Cosmopolitan Theatre, on which Hearst is said to have already spent $200,000 putting it into shape for picture presentations. Victor Herbert and an orchestra of 75 will be featured. "Enemies of Women" is good for two more months at the Central Theatre, where last week at $1.50 top prices it grossed $13,000, the largest figure that house has ever attained, bettering the opening week's receipts by some $300. At this rate "Enemies of Women" should gross $120,000 on a ten-week run, which is certain.

That theatregoers throughout the country are patronizing specials priced at $1 and better was brought to light by figures handed down by showmen during the past week.

Hodkinson's Elmer Clifton special, "Down to the Sea in Ships," is holding up phenomenally as a box office attraction throughout the country. When this picture was first released it was booked exclusively into legit theatres by its producers. It opened in New Bedford, where it was made, and then hit Fall River, Mass., from there going to Providence, R. I., where it grossed about $26,000 in three weeks at the Shubert-Majestic, now the Emery-Majestic. From there it moved to the Tremont in Boston, where it hit $13,000 for about three consecutive weeks. At the Cameo Theatre in New York it is this week in its tenth week. Last week it clipped the $7,800 mark, with indications on Tuesday afternoon that it would equal that figure this week. In ten weeks "Down to the Sea in Ships," at 55 and 75 cent prices at the Cameo, a 539-seat house, will have grossed about $68,000.

The monetary success of this production which is being circused by Hodkinson, under the guidance of expert showmen, is as great as its New York showing. In fact, both Boston and Providence have booked back the special. It is in its third and last week at the State Theatre in Pittsburgh. Last week at Reade's Hippodrome in Cleveland the special dug deep into four figures and proved one of the best money-makers that town has had in many a moon.

But the prize of them all is none other than Paramount's "The Covered Wagon," which is good for a full season's run at the Criterion in New York. This picture will make history, if the comment heard after each show and the box office takings are any criterion. The demand for tickets by the ticket agencies for this picture alone are big enough to guarantee a six months' run of that picture at the Broadway house at a huge profit. Every ticket agency along Broadway and uptown is handling tickets for "The Covered Wagon." The McBride and Tyson agencies are bidding persistently for increased blocks of tickets, but the management is wisely plugging its box office trade, although tickets at the box office are sold ten weeks in advance.

This situation has brought a wholesale call at the agencies. The Tyson and McBride offices are selling at a fifty cents premium, but the others are charging a premium of $1 to $3 per ticket—and getting it. The capacity of the Criterion is very small, it being but 608. At $1 matinees and $1.50 evening prices, "The Covered Wagon" has consistently done $10,800, with indications that this figure will hold up indefinitely.

No picture that has ever played Broadway had such a call for tickets as "The Covered Wagon" is experiencing. Reservations are coming in from out of town. The box office takings average about 6,000 weekly, with the rest coming in via the ticket agencies. Arrangements are now being made by Paramount to stage the picture in other sections. Chicago is the next spot, with Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, San Francisco and other larger cities set. In Washington at the Rialto this picture did $14,000 on the week.

Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale" bids fair to be one of the sensations of the spring-summer season. Rupert Hughes wrote the story and a bevy of something like 35 stars appear in the cast. "Souls for Sale" seems to have got the booking jump on a series of pictures that are scheduled for early distribution, dwelling on the lives of movie stars or movie-struck fans, with Hollywood furnishing the locale. Paramount has a production, "Hollywood," coming out with a similar theme. As was the case with "Mad Love," Goldwyn is straining every effort to beat Paramount to big time booking, their local salesmen doubling their efforts to get immediate bookings. Thus far the picture has been getting top money, doing the house record gross at the Capitol Theatre last week and being held over this week. Clever exploitation, together with the story, stars' presence and popularity of the author, are doing much to pull the customers into the houses on this bet.

Another gold mine being booked at precious box office figures is "Hunting Wild Animals With Gun and Camera," the Snow picture Universal recently took over for distribution. The first week Universal had this picture the exhibitor demand for dates was so great that Universal had to quadruple its order for immediate prints. Wise showmen are booking this special at production prices and having no trouble getting them. Up in Boston this picture is setting all sorts of new records at the Park Theatre.

"Bella Donna," Pola Negri's first American-made feature for Paramount, is another seemingly good and consistent money-maker. It got off to a flying start in New York this week, where it was highly praised by the critics, and should do between $16,000 and $18,000 on the week. In Boston last week "Bella Donna" at the State, in the Back Bay section, grossed about $16,500, which was about three or four hundred dollars more than that house did the previous week on "Glimpses of the Moon," starring Bebe Daniels, and another Paramount picture.

At the Century, Baltimore, managed by Tom Soriero, "Bella Donna" last week almost touched the $16,000 mark. This is remarkable business for this 3,800-seat house, which charges 75 cents top. At Loew's Columbia in Washington the Pola Negri vehicle landed about $14,400 last week, with the engagement at the Strand in Providence, R. I., three hundred dollars less. In fact, this is the first single feature the Strand has booked in three years. Two-reel comedy and Starlight Revue were used on the bill. The house has a capacity of about 2,200 seats and charges 55 cents top at night.

The Goldwyn Pola Negri feature, "Mad Love," also is holding up strong. This vehicle is being used by exhibitors as opposition to the Paramount picture. To offset this opposition the Paramount publicity forces are billing the Pola Negri picture from three to six weeks in advance of the local play dates and stressing on the fact that "Bella Donna" is the foreign star's "first American-made feature," a gag that is evidently scoring effectively. "Mad Love," however, is getting good grosses. At the Modern and Beacon in Boston last week it hit $6,500, which is all those houses can do.

Jackie Coogan's latest First National picture, "Daddy," is generally conceded to be that star's best bet, for it is setting no few marks. It got off to a flying start at the Strand in New York this week, grossing about $14,200 on Sunday and Monday. Metro's "Where the Pavement Ends," with Ramon Navarro and Alice Terry, is another well advertised picture that is living up to expectations and attracting profitable crowds. "Driven" (Universal), "The Christian" (Goldwyn), "The Famous Mrs. Fair" (Metro), "Hearts Aflame" (Metro), "Jazzmania" (Metro), "Robin Hood" (United Artists) and "Safety Last" (Pathe) are also in the big money class of the month. "Safety Last" is proving to be Harold Lloyd's best money bet.

Hope Hampton Goes West

To Play in "The Gold Diggers" for Warner Brothers

When Hope Hampton leaves for California within a few days to play the featured role in Warner Brothers' "The Gold Diggers," it will mark her third big picture this year.

Her first, "Does It Pay?" will be released as a special by Fox. "Lawful Larceny," now being produced at Famous Players' Long Island Studio, is also a special, featuring in addition to Miss Hampton, Nita Naldi, Conrad Nagel and Lew Cody.

The three productions offer exceptionally varied opportunities to the star. Both in sympathetic and unsympathetic parts she will have a chance to show her acting ability, and the many who have followed her career are offering congratulations on her particularly ambitious achievements this year. It is expected that these pictures will all be released at approximately the same time.

"More of an Encyclopedia than a—

"It is more of an encyclopedia than a handbook on motion picture projection," writes Edward Earl, President of Nicholas Power Co., about the new fourth edition.

HAND BOOK of PROJECTION

By

F. H. Richardson

It is a 974 page book. It has 375 illustrations. It gives full instructions on care and operation of Power, Simplex, Proctor, Motiograph and Baird projectors. It contains a full account of Mazda lamp projection. It describes the G. E. Sunlight and Simplex high intensity arc lamps. It tells all about motion picture electricity. It treats fully on generators, insulation, grounds, lenses, light action, mercury arc rectifiers, motor generators, picture distortion, practical projection optics, the projection room, the screen, speed indicators, transformers, etc. It asks and answers 842 appropriate questions. It has a complete, fast working index. It is up-to-date and authentic. It is written by an author who knows what he's writing about, who writes in plain understandable English, and who is the only projection author who has already written and completely sold out three large previous editions of a book on projection.

A copy of this invaluable book belongs in every moving picture theatre

Richardson, on Trip, Gathers Interesting News of Theatres

By F. H. RICHARDSON
Projection Editor, Moving Picture World

HAVING some business in Chicago, I concluded to murder several birds with one toss of the brick, and stopped in Rochester and Cleveland to once-over various things, meet old friends, and swap trade gossip.

I landed in Rochester in the exact geographical center of a blizzard. I went up to the Bausch & Lomb plant, had a long chat with those good old scouts, Dr. Herman Kellner and Sales Manager I. L. Nixon, on a subject of which you will have news very shortly. The Bausch & Lomb Company is doing some mighty valuable work in its experimental laboratories; also, I venture the assertion that it will soon spring something on us that will be of very large benefit to projection, hence, indirectly to the industry as a whole. I will, however, tell you all about it when the time comes.

The afternoon found me at the Eastman offices, shaking hands with George Blair, than whom, I can honestly say, there is no better liked man in all the motion picture industry. And, mind you, that's no mere bunch of idle words, either. While there by invitation of George Eastman, extended some time ago, I called on him in his truly beautiful offices on the sixteenth floor of the Eastman office building. A pleasant half hour was spent discussing various matters concerning projection and matters allied thereto. It was my first meeting with the Kodak Wizard, whom I found, like all really big men, to be a man with whom one may discuss matters freely, with a feeling that due consideration will be given all matters placed before him; also that argument would not necessarily be a waste of words because one's views and opinions happen to differ with the views and opinions of Mr. Eastman.

The evening was given over to L. M. Tounsend, chief projectionist of the Eastman Theatre. We visited the theatre, where I met and had an enjoyable chat with the manager, William Fait. I found Townsend to have changed the Eastman projection room lighting for the better since my last visit, though it is still in need of further improvement. The front wall is too light in color and the image of the high intensity arc is projected to the wall right beside the observation port—very bad practice, if you ask me. The image should be on the floor, the ceiling or higher up on the wall. Besides, the port is distinctly bad.

Chief Projectionist Townsend impresses me, everything considered, as the right man in the right place. He is sincere, energetic and willing to learn, though he is almost entirely lacking in the matter of a projectionist library. I think, for instance, that not a man in the Eastman Theatre owns a handbook, and if there are any other books, or anything else bearing on projection, in or about the projection room or theatre, they were not visible. This is a condition the Eastman projection room force certainly has no reason to be proud of.

Oh, yes, I nearly forgot, Mr. Eastman told me they had perfected a new method of lighting orchestra music, which will entirely eliminate all glare. This, as I understand it, will be ready for actual use very soon.

Cleveland

At Cleveland, Old Granpa Boreas was very much on the job. I stopped off there for four things, viz.: to visit my old friend Howard Codding, his squaw and papoose; to call on Friend Egeler at Nela Park, John Hertner of the Hertner Electric Company, and at the National Carbon Works. The first three I did all right, but was too late to make the National Saturday afternoon. Howard Codding is an old and tried friend. He is one of the men who have been longest engaged in shooting pictures at screens in Cleveland. He is all wool and thirty-six full inches wide. The only thing I have against Codding is this: He has built a radio set with which he has (so he says) "got" about everything on earth. He is now trying to "get" the various planets. It is in his dining room. While I partook of the Codding hospitality, he "got" various cities, which was all right, only just as I had a fork well loaded on its way to the usual place forks are presumed to unload, Codding "got" Kansas City. Some gink out in that "City by the Kaw" was singing "My County 'Tis of—awk, awk—sweet land of—awk—zip—zip, of thee I—zip—zip—awk." Well, of course, I had to get up, so the forkful was unduly delayed. When the "song" (?) was finished I sat down and had just grabbed the fork when Codding "got" some good pastor in Pittsburgh just as he said, "Let us pray," so, of course, the provender had to await again. Outside of that, Brother Codding is all right and I enjoyed my visit with him and his immensely.

At the plant of the Hertner Electric Company I found John Hertner on the job, and a whole flock of Transverters in course of construction. I regord Hertner as among the very best electricians in this or any other country. We had a pleasant visit and talked over various matters. Hertner says business is improving.

Some manufacturers have complained of encountering trouble making collections for apparatus sold to theatres. I asked Hertner as to his experience in this matter. His reply was to the effect that the Hertner Company had experienced little, if any, difficulty with collections, because it had only given credit where the evidence was that credit was deserved—a policy which I hold to represent sound business sense.

Some manufacturers, in the effort to get business—get it anyhow, trusting to fortune for results—give credit indiscriminately, without any sort of adequate investigation. Then when they reap what they have sowed, they condemn all exhibitors for the sins of a minority with whom they had no business dealing at all.

Out at Nela Park I found C. E. Egeler hard at work, as usual. Had lunch with Egeler and R. E. Farnham. We discussed many matters of interest, and I trust of mutual benefit.

The Nela Park folks (General Electric National Lamp Works) are constantly experimenting to improve Mazda projection lamps. The main effort is directed toward increase of light without decrease in efficiency. I am glad to be able to say that encouraging progress is being made.

Just now the new Bausch & Lomb lens seems to be the big Mazda event. Photometric tests show that it increases the screen illumination by a full fifty per cent.

I was unable to get to the National Carbon Works, it being Saturday and a short business day. Sorry, for I'd have liked to see "Bill" Kunzman and the rest of the National bunch. Well, better luck next time!

Meanwhile, there is work needed in connection with carbon cores, which have the distinctly bad habit of showing entirely too many faults. This slap is not directed at the National any more than at other carbon manufacturers. They all do it, and an imperfect core can and does raise (censored) with results in screen illumination in several different ways. We want and need a carbon core which not only is always present at roll call, but which will stay present during the entire battle, and will burn even with the surrounding carbon all the time. A large order, yes, but it CAN be filled, and it is up to you carbon makers to deliver the goods.

I am told that the National Company engineers are experimenting with a D. C. carbon, designed to do for D. C. the same thing Special White Flame carbons did for A. C. I don't know how far the laboratories have progressed in their experiments, but do know that I suggested to them the need for this fully five years ago.

THE A. M. P. A.'S NAKED TRUTH BOARD OF STRATEGY IN ACTION

T. O. C. C. Holds First Meeting Under Leadership of O'Reilly

THE first meeting under the regime of its new officers who were installed last week was held by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in the South Gardens of the Hotel Astor, Tuesday afternoon.

One of the outstanding events of the meeting was the talk made by William Brandt in which he recommended that all exhibitors get behind a movement to alleviate the hardships imposed on exhibitors by the law which forbids unaccompanied children entering moving picture houses.

Mr. Brandt called attention to the fact that under existing conditions unwarranted hardships are imposed upon exhibitors, who, Mr. Brandt said, are arrested, arraigned with the lowest type of criminals and fined for infractions of the law when it is often the case that the exhibitor is entirely ignorant of the law's being broken. "Not only are we fined and imprisoned," Mr. Brandt said, "but it is often the case that our licenses are revoked and thousands of dollars of investments are thus utterly destroyed."

Charles O'Reilly, newly elected president of the body, heartily endorsed Mr. Brandt's suggestion and also urged that exhibitors settle down to amicable relations with each other. He said that it is one of the great faults of all exhibitor organizations that internal disputes cause ill feeling and disruption of the organizations' policies.

Fred Wilson stated that the chief need of the organization was to have a building of its own—a home where the members could rally for the adjustment of its affairs and which each member could consider as a fort for the safeguarding of the industry's welfare. Mr. O'Reilly agreed that that was a large need of the organization and stated that he thought he could say with authority that by next year such plans will have been consummated.

A luncheon for the members and for the trade press was served, after which the members heard the reading of the minutes of the last meeting and also recent communications, one of which, from a large producing company, spoke of the difficulties it sometimes encounters with moving picture houses and cited one instance in which it said a film of a comedy had been kept by an exhibitor for six months, while the producers were searching everywhere for it.

Loew to Dispose of Canadian Holdings; to Expand in the East

THAT Marcus Loew will in the course of the next six months dispose of all his theatre interests in Canada was established into a fact through statements that emanated from his New York office. Mr. Loew already has sold his interests in Montreal theatres.

Instead, Mr. Loew next season is expected to concentrate every effort in broadening his interests in theatre holdings in New England. At present Mr. Loew owns only the Olympia and State Theatres in Boston, while his vaudeville offices furnish vaudeville bookings for houses in Providence, Fall River, Boston, Springfield and several other cities.

Late this month Mr. Loew is expected to start a drive for more picture theatres in New England. It is a well known fact in show circles that Mr. Loew's money-making houses have been located in New York City and adjacent territory. Recently he relinguished his holdings in the Coast houses that he took over several years ago from Ackerman & Harris, which firm is now again operating those theatres.

Cobb Addresses Club

In an address before the men's club of a church in his home city of Watertown, N. Y., George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, last week declared that censors do not operate to curb and that the Motion Picture Commission aims solely to regulate. Mr. Cobb declared that his Commission acts in a capacity similar to that of a judge in court and instead of seeking to restrict motion picture writers, it attempts to determine whether or not a photoplay is presented according to the requirements of the New York State law.

W. D. McGuire of Review Board Dead

W. D. McGUIRE, JR., executive secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, died Tuesday night, April 17, at Derby, Conn., from illness following an operation for appendicitis. Mr. McGuire, who was a resident of Scarsdale, N. Y., had been connected with the National Board since its organization in 1909 as a committee of the People's Institute, first as review secretary, later succeeding John Collier as executive secretary.

In this capacity Mr. McGuire devoted himself to the affairs of the Board, in which he had taken a leading part up to its present development. He was also vice-chairman of the National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board. A graduate of Williams College and of the New York School of Philanthropy (New York School of Social Work), he was widely known among social service agencies as well as among executives of the film industry. A wife, Alice Ayre McGuire, two children and a brother, Fred B. McGuire, of Derby, survive.

Back from Exchange Tour

Hodkinson Division Sales Head Reports Business Good

H. H. Hurn, central division sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, returned from a flying trip to exchanges in the Central West and left last week for Chicago in the interests of the Elmer Clifton special, "Down to the Sea in Ships."

During Mr. Hurn's trip through the central division territory he visited the exchanges in Detroit, Omaha, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and Minneapolis, and got in touch with leading motion picture exhibitors for the purpose of acquiring first hand information relative to the growing value of Hodkinson product as well as facts concerning business conditions in general.

According to a general summing up of these personal conversations, Mr. Hurn states that in his opinion business has greatly improved throughout the Middle West.

Devotes Space to Shipman

Picture Producer Given Lengthy Story in Ford's Paper

Henry Ford's publication, "The Dearborn Independent," has opened its columns, for the first time, to the growth of the moving picture industry in Canada, and, in so doing, has given unusual prominence to the activities of Ernest Shipman in the Dominion.

In an article entitled "Canada's Attempt at Movie Independence," appearing in the issue of March 31, the publication recounts in detail the motives that actuated Shipman to launch his organizations in Canada, and the success that has thus far crowned his efforts.

"The Nationalistic revival provided the opportunity," reads the article in part, "but it remained for some individual to take advantage of it and organize those who were willing to provide the financial backing for the production of Canadian pictures. This man appeared in the person of Ernest Shipman."

Services for Rothermel

Many Friends of Motion Picture Man Unite in Honoring His Memory

Memorial services for the late Royale Valray Rothermel, organizer and former president of the Filmcraft Association and prominently identified with the motion picture field from its inception, who died last February at the family's western home in Tucson, Ariz., were held Thursday evening at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Sixty-ninth street, New York City, the Rev. Nathan Seagle, rector, officiating. The church was filled with friends, including the fraternity brethren of the deceased from Pi Kappa Alpha Chapter of Alpha-Upsilon of New York University, who attended in a body. A fine musical program was rendered by Miss Beatty, soprano, and William Russell McAdam, baritone, with Miss Usher at the organ.

Mr. Rothermel, who during the past year made his home in Greenwich Village, was an influential and rising figure in the motion picture world when he gave up his brilliant prospects to fight in the Great War. At Brest his health became impaired and he steadily declined until the end came at Tucson.

Besides organizing and heading the Filmcraft Association, he was an author and traveler of note, visiting the Cocos Islands and publishing his experiences in various magazines. He conducted his own film studio at Dongan Hills, Staten Island, and his business and artistic abilities would no doubt have won him a top place in his chosen profession had not an untimely death claimed him at the early age of 29.

First National and Sam Goldwyn Make Important Arrangement

AFTER months of rumor, no end of guesses and no little anticipation, First National has closed a contract with Samuel Goldwyn for a series of George Fitzmaurice productions and for the motion picture version of "Potash and Perlmutter."

This important announcement means that First National has obtained the much looked for product of this prominent producer and equally prominent director, whose output will be included in next season's program of First National.

The production of "Potash and Perlmutter," one of the strongest attractions that the stage has ever known, will be the first release under the new agreement.

The negotiations which terminated in the signing of a contract have been under way for many weeks, during which Mr. Goldwyn was given every opportunity to study First National's distribution system.

During the past year Mr. Goldwyn has been laying plans for active participation in the motion picture business on a scale that will surpass even his earlier activities, it is reported.

It is announced that Mr. Fitzmaurice's initial production will be one of Hall Caine's most popular stories, exteriors for which will be made in the vicinity of Rome, Italy. Barbara La Marr, Montague Love and other prominent actors, engaged for an all-star cast, will be sent over-seas to make exteriors for this picture, planned as a super-special.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN

Ouida Bergere, who has written the continuities for practically all of Mr. Fitzmaurice's productions will prepare the script for the Hall Caine story and for those to follow.

"Potash and Perlmutter" will be directed by Clarence Badger, recognized as one of the ablest directors in the profession. Barney Barnard and Alexander Carr have been engaged for the characters they created on the stage. Vera Gordon will also be featured.

Coincident with the distribution of the film, 700 newspapers throughout the English speaking countries will carry topical articles by Montague Glass introducing "Potash and Perlmutter." Also Mr. Goldwyn's serial story, "Behind the Scenes," now running in The Pictorial Review will appear in approximately 1,300 daily newspapers syndicated by the United Press.

With all this publicity to prepare the way, it is figured that "Potash and Perlmutter" will be one of the greatest box office sensations that the screen has ever known, First National says.

In speaking of the contract just closed, Richard Rowland, general manager of Associated First National, said: "We are highly gratified at obtaining the Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice productions in which we have every confidence. It would be difficult to find a better producer-director combination than Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Fitzmaurice."

Film Interests Alert to Block Laws Harmful to the Industry

WITH two weeks to run, there are several bills of interest to the motion picture industry in the New York State Legislature. A bill introduced some time ago by Senator Meyer Levey, proposing to amend the lien law relative to liens on motion picture films, was reported out of committee last week and is slated for final passage in the Senate.

This bill provides that persons and corporations operating motion picture laboratories, shall have a lien on the positive and negative prints in their possession, including the distribution and exhibition rights thereon, and shall retain such film until full payment has been made by the owners. The bill further provides that no lien granted shall be waived or impaired by the taking of any note due for work performed.

There has been absolutely no change during the last week in connection with the censorship proposition as it exists at Albany. The bill calling for the repeal of the statute is still in committee in the Assembly, and apparently there is to be no effort toward reporting it out. Little or nothing on censorship is being heard around the State Capitol. It is generally admitted that the present law will exist for at least another year.

Some talk is heard to the effect that leaders of both political parties are rather favorably inclined toward the Miller bill as a means of bringing additional revenue to the coffers of New York State. While the bill will probably never become a law, those watching motion picture legislation pricked up their ears the past week and are on the lookout that the bill does not slip through. This bill would exact a 6 per cent tax on the gross receipts of motion picture theatres in this State, as well as all other forms of amusement.

May Finance Producers

As a means of offsetting the high bids submitted by the syndicate bookers, the A. B. C., made up of independently owned theatres in the metropolitan district, this week made advances to finance a number of independent producers next season. The plan is not entirely new and, in many ways, similar to the one outlined to the national exhibitors at their convention in Washington, D. C., last spring. The financing proposition, however, is not looked upon with favor by the entire organization. About five members of the organized independent exhibitors are interested in the project.

Independents May Meet

Independent producers and distributors may hold a convention of their own in Chicago May 19-26, the period selected by the M. P. T. O. A. for their annual convention this year. There is a strong feeling in the independent market that now is the time to bring about an effective organization of independents. A committee to arrange the meetings will be named next week at a luncheon to be held in Hotel Astor where those in charge of the convention movement will hold bi-weekly meetings.

Le Roy to Open Soon

PAWTUCKET, R. I.—(Special—The Le Roy Theatre, admittedly the most beautiful picture theatre in the world for its size (1,800 seats), will be opened officially on April 30, with Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale" the principal attraction. The theatre is owned by the Emery interests of Providence. The official opening will be an auspicious affair. Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, James Grainger and many other film magnates will attend the opening. Nils Granland will bring a galaxy of stars to the opening, which will be followed with a banquet at which the Governor of Rhode Island, the local Mayor and City Council will participate.

Goldwyn to Distribute Fifteen Cosmopolitan Films Next Season

FIFTEEN pictures produced by Cosmopolitan Productions will be distributed for next season in conjunction with the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. This release list follows the merger for distribution recently consummated by William Randolph Hearst and F. J. Godsol.

"Enemies of Women," now enjoying a successful run at the Central Theatre, and Marion Davies in "Little Old New York" will be the first two releases. The list of productions follow:

"Enemies of Women," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, with Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens. Directed by Alan Crosland. Scenario by John Lynch. Settings by Joseph Urban.

Marion Davies in "Little Old New York," by Rida Johnson Young. Directed by Sidney Olcott. Scenario by Luther Reed. Settings by Joseph Urban.

"The Daughter of Mother McGinn," by Boyle, with Colleen Moore, Forrest Stanley, Margaret Seddon and George Cooper. Directed by Frances Marion and George Hill. Scenario by Frances Marion.

"Unseeing Eyes," by Arthur Stringer, with Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen. Directed by E. H. Griffith. Scenario by Bayard Veiller.

"Under the Red Robe," by Stanley Weyman, with Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens. Directed by Alan Crosland. Scenario by Bayard Veiller. Settings by Joseph Urban.

Marion Davies in "Yolanda," by Charles Major. Scenario by Luther Reed. Settings by Joseph Urban.

"The Flaming Forest," by James Oliver Curwood.

"Alias the Lone Wolf," by Louis Joseph Vance, with Bert Lytell.

"The Temptress," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

"The Country Beyond," by James Oliver Curwood.

"Vendetta," by Marie Corelli.

"A Gentleman of France," by Stanley Weyman, with Bert Lytell.

Marion Davies in "Alice of Old Vincennes," by Maurice Thompson.

"The Helmet of Navarre," by Bertha Runkle, with Bert Lytell.

"The Garden of Peril," by Cynthia Stockley.

Many Films Coming to Market All About Movies, Themselves

PICTURES based on stories involving movie-struck girls and lads, with Hollywood furnishing the locale, are virtually deluging the market. With Goldwyn's Rupert Hughes story, "Souls for Sale," already virtually mopping up and getting the jump on the others, at least six other pictures based on similar yarns are about to make their appearance.

The much advertised and awaited Paramount special, "Hollywood," which is said to be one of the big pictures of the year, introducing a bevy of thirty-four true headliners, is expected to make its debut within a week or two. The independent market already has two Hollywood pictures. C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation next week will release "Mary of the Movies," which was completed last week. Arrow Film Corporation is doubling its efforts advertising "Night Life in Hollywood" as a result of the current demand for this type of production with "names."

The Goldwyn and Paramount organizations never before have been involved in the determined drive now holding their attention. Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale" last week grossed more than $57,000 at the New York Capitol and is being held over. The battle this week moved to New England, where "Souls for Sale" will be released generally next week. This will give the Goldwyn picture at least a two-week jump on the Paramount feature and exhibitors in that territory are being requested to keep dates on "Souls for Sale" "quiet and announce the engagement of the picture as late as possible without hampering whatever exploitation might have been planned."

The same method was utilized by salesmen in various territories on the booking of "Mad Love," with Pola Negri, considered Goldwyn opposition to Pola Negri's Paramount special, "Bella Donna."

First National Convention Opens in Atlantic City

WITH First National Franchise holders, members of the Executive Committee, heads of departments and several foreign representatives in attendance, a spirit of extreme optimism marked the opening of the First National convention at the Ritz Carlton in Atlantic City, Tuesday afternoon.

Great enthusiasm greeted the addresses delivered on Wednesday by Joseph M. Schenck, who came East especially to attend the convention and A. H. Giannini, the Italian banker. All of the film men were on hand to hear these two speakers who pointed the way to further advancement in the production and marketing of motion pictures.

The convention will remain in session until Saturday of this week.

Those in attendance are Robert Lieber, president; Harry O. Schwalbe, chairman; Richard A. Rowland, general manager; E. B. Johnson, foreign department; Sam Spring, legal department; C. S. Pinkerton, financial comptroller; Samuel Katz, executive committee; A. H. Blank, of the executive committee; and Moe Mark of the executive committee; W. P. Dewees, Jacob Fabian, Nathan Gordon, E. M. Asher, Tom Boland, J. B. Clark, Harry Crandall; R. D. Craver, Frank Ferrandini, Moe Finkelstein, Robert Fleer, Mike Gore, John H. Kunsky; Earl Hammons, Sol Lesser, Frey Levy, John McGuirk; E. Mandelbaum, Harry Nolan and I. H. Rubin.

Convention at Pittsburgh

Western Pennsylvania Theatre Owners Elect Officers

Jerome Casper was re-elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania at the third annual convention of that body held at the General Forbes Hotel, Pittsburgh, April, 16, 17 and 18.

Other officers re-elected for the coming year are John Newman, vice-president; Hyman Goldberg, treasurer; Fred Herrington, secretary.

Among others present and who spoke were Sydney S. Cohen, president of M. P. T. O. A.; M. J. O'Toole, of Scranton, chairman of Public Service Commission of M. P. T. O. A.; Charles J. Pettijohn, representing Will H. Hays; R. F. Woodhall, president of New Jersey Theatre Owners; Sam Bullock, of Cleveland, and Henry W. Gauding, who was chairman of the convention.

John Alderdice and Harry Davis succeeded M. Rosenbloom and W. J. Bittner on the board of managers.

Want Films in Schools

Producers and Educators Formulate Plans for that Purpose

Recognizing that instructional pictures in schools will be helpful to the entire moving picture industry, a movement has been started by producers to make the showing of such films part of the schools' daily routine.

With this end in view a meeting was recently held at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., at which a number of educators were present. At this meeting a group of producers donated $5,000 for the making of a picture for school use. It was argued that not only would the school pictures be of educational value, but that they would have another purpose inasmuch as they would accustom the children to looking at pictures and instill in them a desire to see those of an entertaining nature after school hours.

The producing companies represented at the meeting were Goldwyn, Fox, Metro, Vitagraph, Universal, Famous Players, First National, Griffith, Educational and Bray Productions. The educators were Dr. Charles H. Judd of the University of Chicago, Leonard Ayres of Cleveland, Elizabeth Breckenridge of Louisville, Elizabeth Hall of Minneapolis, and L. C. Kalback, representing the Federal Commissioner of Education.

To Entertain Exhibitors

Preparations are being made for the entertainment of about 25 exhibitors, members of the Virginia Motion Picture Exhibitors League, who will come to Washington for an annual convention next week. The Washington Film Board of Trade has appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Galanty, Fuller, Sherwood and Price to make plans for entertaining the distributors. It is probable that there will be a dinner on the final day of the convention at one of the local hotels. A number of vaudeville stunts will be put on for the occasion.

Charles Neidhart Dies

Charles Neidhart, 23 years old, associated with the Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company of Springfield, Mass., for the past five years, died in a New York hospital April 7. He was taken ill last September and was obliged to resign his position as manager of the Park Theatre in Utica, N. Y., which is one of the houses in the Goldstein chain.

Besides his mother, he is survived by two sisters, both of Utica, and an uncle, Commissioner Warren Hubbard of New York.

At the White House

Paramount Film Shown for the President and His Guests

Before a brilliant audience, James Cruze's Paramount production of "The Covered Wagon" was shown Saturday night in the East Room of the White House, marking the resumption of the White House social season following the illness of Mrs. Harding.

In addition to the President and Mrs. Harding there were present members of the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, ranking officers of the Army and Navy, leading Senators and Representatives and leaders of Washington society, together with their wives, to the number of about a hundred and fifty.

The showing was a reproduction of the presentation given the picture at the Criterion Theatre in New York, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation having sent on an orchestra of twenty-five pieces from the Criterion under the direction of Josiah Zuro. The showing followed a message from the White House that the President was deeply interested in the picture and would like to see it as soon as possible.

The reception accorded "The Covered Wagon" in the White House was extremely enthusiastic, the applause starting with the dedication of the picture to Theodore Roosevelt and keeping up practically continuously throughout the entire ten reels.

On Sunday afternoon, through arrangements made by Charles E. McCarthy of Famous Players, the picture was shown in the Garrick Theatre, Washington, to the members of the National Press Club, the famous organization of Washington correspondents. The Criterion presentation was again duplicated and the picture enthusiastically received.

To Hold Convention

North Carolina Showmen Meet June 28 and 29

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina will hold their annual convention at the Oceanic Hotel, Wrightsville Beach, N. C., June 28 and 29. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia and South Carolina have been invited and are expected to attend. Will H. Hays has also been sent an invitation.

A program that is expected to interest each exhibitor has been prepared. An attempt has been made to formulate this program with a view to showing the exhibitors how their theatres can be made more profitable.

The North Carolina exhibitors have been organized about ten years, and stand among the foremost organizations in the South.

Steffes Nominated as Choice of Northwest for National President

W. A. STEFFES of Minneapolis, president of the Minnesota unit, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was nominated at the three-day convention held April 10, 11 and 12 at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, as the Northwest's choice for the national presidency.

Supporters of Steffes will go to the Chicago convention in a special train to battle for his election and, although anticipating a hard fight, are optimistic about the outcome.

Tom Foster of Stanley, Wis., nominated Steffes for the national presidency at Thursday's session of the convention. In nominating him, Foster said:

"I know I am speaking the wishes and demands of exhibitors of Western Wisconsin when I say that we want 'Fighting Al' Steffes as our next national president. Minneapolis can ill afford to lose its leader, but we call upon Minnesota to make that sacrifice. I pledge you that we will do all within our power to make the Wisconsin delegation 100 per cent for Steffes at the Chicago convention."

One hundred and fifty-four exhibitors, the largest number that ever attended a state convention here, went on record supporting the Steffes candidacy.

Paramount among resolutions adopted was one placing the proposed uniform contract before the Chicago convention as a national issue which the national convention should decide, and another resolution in which the convention went on record as favoring was an "open convention" in Chicago.

W. A. Steffes, president, and Theodore L. Hays, vice-president, were re-elected at the annual election of officers. Fred Holzapfel, Minneapolis, was selected treasurer to succeed A. Kaplan, and Clyde Hitchcock, secretary, succeeding Fred Larkins. The new executive committee is Joseph Freidman, St. Paul; J. B. Clinton, Duluth; A. Kaplan, Minneapolis; V. B. Valleau, Bismarck; Jay Dundas, Sioux Falls; W. L. Nichols, Fairmont; Harvey Buchanan, Superior; Harold Finkelstein and Harry Dryer, Minneapolis, and H. Johnson, Rush City.

Governor J. A. O. Preus of Minnesota will head the delegates chosen to attend the Chicago convention. They are: Fred Larkin, Anoka; Theodore L. Hays, Minneapolis; Clyde Hitchcock, H. P. Greene, A. Kaplan, Harry Dryer and Dan Chamberlain, Minneapolis; C. L. Graham and Joseph Friedman, St. Paul; J. B. Clinton, Duluth, and H. Johnson, Rush City.

Sydney S. Cohen, national president, did not attend the convention. He was represented by A. R. Pramer, head of the Iowa and Nebraska unit.

Laemmle Scholarship Offer Praised by Chicago Educator

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, has received praise and commendation from all sides, especially from educators and collegiate leaders, for his recent steps taken to interest the country's colleges and universities in motion picture advancement.

In offering a scholarship for the student qualifying as the best scenario writer, and in offering an endowment to the college where this student attends, he has awakened a nation-wide interest in the part the schools of the land can play in making the screen a national expression.

The latest to voice appreciation for what Laemmle is doing is Dudley Grant Hays, Director of Visual Education of Chicago and president of the National Academy of Visual Education. The following letter has just been received from him by the Universal chief:

"I can see in the movement you are starting to interest students in colleges to make a careful study of scenario writing, and to endeavor to put forth their best thought in the line of film production by contributing scenarios which may be of help in the future production of wholesome films, a great opportunity for public good. I believe that such a movement will result in teachers of literature making this thought part of their regular work with classes in literature.

"In former days the art of entertaining by means of written or spoken words received considerable attention from instructors with their classes. The great movement in recent years of entertaining by means of pictures on the screen has to a large degree supplanted some of the fundamental notions back of what prevailed with the older type of expression. To acquaint pupils with modern methods of visualizing by means of pictures on the screen, rather than by word pictures, is something that should receive more attention, I believe, than has been given to the topic. The plan you have in mind will furnish an incentive that I believe will induce many students to turn to this line of thought, and in the aggregate the good that they may accomplish will be great. I trust that your splendid offer will be simply an entering wedge for greater work along this line, and I wish you the greatest of success in what you have undertaken to do.

"It has often occurred to me that splendid work might be done, not only in the universities and colleges, but also in high schools, by allowing credits to be given to the pupils who prepare the best screen review of films that they see portrayed in their respective communities. Such work will lead the students to estimate the film they are viewing much more carefully than though they were simply going to be entertained for a couple of hours. A purposeful viewing of a screened picture, with the direct object of producing a carefully prepared review, will bring about a mind attitude which I believe will be for the good of all concerned. This thought, coupled with the plan you have in mind, will make a fine arrangement, I believe, to help clear up some of the wrong atmosphere prevalent in recent years in the screen world."

Juanita Hansen on Tour

Juanita Hansen, the former film star, who has been writing a series of articles for Hearts newspapers dwelling on the drug evil, this week started her out-of-town personal appearance tour. Last week she appeared at the Harlem Opera House in New York. She gave special matinees for women and touched on her own experiences as a drug addict and at the same time made a plea to the mothers for concerted action against the traffickers. She is appearing at the Bowdoin Square Theatre in Boston this week. The publicity being given Miss Hansen has developed in a wholesale reissue of old pictures in which she is starred.

Vetoes Bill Affecting Violation of Ohio Censorship Regulation

ALMOST concurrently with Senator MacMurray's introduction of the blue law bill in the Illinois Legislature, Governor A. V. Donahey, sitting in the executive mansion at Columbus, Ohio, vetoed the bill of the Rev. J. H. T. Gordon, Logan County Representative in the General Assembly, striking out the punishment of imprisonment for violators of censorship statutes, and increasing the fine to a maximum of $1,000.

The veto was accompanied by an implied rebuke on the part of the Governor, who expressed himself as follows: "If in the practical administration of the present censorship laws experience has developed the desirability of changes, they might be made, with all propriety, in such a manner as to strengthen rather than weaken their effectiveness."

In originally offering the bill, the Rev. Gordon frankly declared that he proposed to prevent these cases being heard by juries on the ground that too many alleged offenders were being acquitted. His proposal was in imitation of the Crabbe and Miller prohibition acts, and in harmony with the decisions of the Ohio Supreme Court that, where imprisonment is not a penalty, an accused person may not demand a jury.

However, it was not upon this ground that Governor Donahey disapproved the measure, but because of the evils he feared would flow from the abolition of the imprisonment clause, saying:

"I hesitate to afford to unscrupulous exhibitors or purveyors of immoral, indecent or otherwise objectionable films the opportunity of placing such pictures on exhibition at a huge profit, and suffer as a penalty for such infractions of law a mere fine, easily paid from the profits of such sordid enterprise.

"In my opinion, the risk of imprisonment up to one year for flagrant outrage of public decency serves as an emphatic deterrent to those who, not fearing mere fines, otherwise might seek profit unhesitatingly at the expense of public morals.

"Let us safeguard, with every proper precaution, the moral atmosphere in which our boys and girls are growing. Let us shield against every sinister influence or embarrassing contact the innate modesty and purity of our mothers, wives and daughters."

The existing law, which it was sought by the Rev. Gordon to supplant, provides that the showing of unlicensed films and the commission of the various other offenses, of which the MOVING PICTURE WORLD carried a detailed account a few weeks ago, are punishable by fines up to $300 or imprisonment from thirty days to one year, or both. The vetoed measure made the maximum fine $1,000 and entirely eliminated the imprisonment.

In the Columbus quarters it is generally believed that the General Assembly will fully support the Governor's veto, now that the question of enforcement has been called up, rather than that of the constitutional right of trial by jury.

When interviewed by the representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, prominent Cincinnati exhibitors and officials of the leading film exchanges were exceptionally jubilant over the report that came from Columbus, advising of the action of Governor Victor Donahey in vetoing the much-discussed Gordon bill affecting the violation of censorship regulations, which was intended primarily to deprive exhibitors of the right of trial by jury in cases that come under the criminal provision of the Ohio Board of Censorship, Department of Education, of which Vernon M. Riegel is the head.

Andrew Hettisheimer, manager of the Orpheum Theatre and vice-president of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, who has made a special and very exhaustive study of the proposed legislation, said, when interviewed: "This Gordon bill was entirely too drastic in its application. If it had become a law we would have been subject to citation and fine at the hands of any small Squire or Magistrate without the possibility or privilege of appealing the case. All law-abiding exhibitors will certainly approve the attitude of the Governor."

W. A. Kaiser, president of the Cincinnati Film Board of Trade, expressed his gratification over the Governor's veto.

Jules Frankel, manager of Gifts Theatre, voiced his sentiments by saying that he was strictly in favor of fair play for the large and small exhibitor alike. He added: "Whenever there is a technical violation of the censorship laws, the exhibitor should not be subjected to trial before any Magistrate without the right of demanding a jury trial."

I. Libson, manager of the Palace, Capitol, Strand, Lyric and Family theatres, stated that he was heartily in favor of the official action taken in the matter, while officials and executives of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, the Hodkinson Exchange, and many other Cincinnati branch exchanges expressed approval of the Governor's veto.

F. W. Gehle's Speech Agreeably Surprises A. M. P. A.

Most all the publicity experts who come as guest speakers to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' luncheons take it upon themselves to criticize motion picture publicity methods. But the most recent speaker came to admire and praise them.

Frederick W. Gehle, vice-president in charge of publicity of the Mechanics and Metals Bank, was the speaker. He had none but good words for the publicity methods employed in the motion picture industry, and for the industry too.

Henry Clay Bate of Universal acted as "barker" of the day. Horace Judge, leaving soon for England, where he will handle First National's publicity, was presented with a desk clock and some kind words on the part of P. A. Parsons.

Interesting Subjects

To Be Discussed at Engineer's Convention

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its spring meeting at Atlantic City May 7, 8, 9 and 10. The program promises to be both interesting and instructive.

The following papers are among those to be read: Efficiency in Carbon Arc Projection, by W. R. Mott and W. C. Kunzman. This paper will deal with efficiency gained with increased current and changes in optical systems; also it will show many curves and designs.

High Speed Photography, Without the Use of Especially Designed Cameras, by J. H. McNabb. The technical data associated with the means for obtaining the degree of equilibrium necessary for the exceptionally high speed in a camera which is not especially designed for this purpose.

The Photofilm, by Dr. Lee DeForest. This paper will deal briefly with the history of attempts to record sound photographically, particularly in connection with motion pictures. There will be an outline of the various steps made in the progress of photographing and reproducing such photographed sound; also a discussion of what seems to lie in the future.

Testing Motion Picture Projectors for Naval Service, by C. S. Gillette, Lieutenant Commander, U. S. N. This subject will include a discussion of the use of motion picture projectors in the U. S. Navy, the handling of motion picture projectors on men of war vessels, the purchasing and distribution of films, special requirements of motion picture projectors for use in the naval service and on shipboard, testing motion picture projectors to determine their suitability or naval service, et cetera.

Telephone Book for Industry Is Published in London

A special telephone directory for the use of those in the film industry in Great Britain has just been issued by the Bioscope Publishing Company. Approximately a thousand names, representing the various branches of the industry, are included.

It is a neat volume of attractive appearance. With its thumb index, large typed names of subscribers, and many informative advertisements, it should be of considerable service to the subscriber. Space for personal memoranda is also included.

Stars Bear Invitations

Traveling in Interest of Monroe Centennial

Ruth Roland, Pathe Serial star, and Madge Bellamy, star of the Thomas S. Ince organization, are touring the country in the interests of the Motion Picture Exhibition to be held in conjunction with the Monroe Centennial to be held in Los Angeles July 2 to August 4.

Both stars bear letters of invitation from Mayor George E. Cryer, of Los Angeles, to the mayors of other prominent cities and to Governors of states to attend the celebration.

Miss Bellamy was in New York last week and then went to Washington, D. C. Miss Roland is now in the metropolis, where she will remain two or three weeks.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Bowlby's Puritans Seek to Make Illinois Sundays Blue

Senate Bill No. 360 was sprung on the Illinois Legislature by Senator MacMurray. The bill is aimed at Sunday amusements and if passed would prohibit Sunday theatres, Sunday baseball and any sports or amusements on Sunday. Should it become a law it would stop all Sunday baseball and theatres or other amusements, including movies.

The text of the bill says: "Whoever on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, promotes, conducts, takes part in or uses or permits property under his control to be used for any performance, exhibition, show, carnival, fair or other entertainment, or any contest, sport, game, play, dance or other amusement, entrance to which is paid by ticket or admission fee, directly or indirectly, or at which, except as hereinafter provided, a free will offering is asked or accepted, or where any stake is put up or money prize or other thing of commercial value is offered, is guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined for the first offense not less than $50 nor more than $500, or be confined in the county jail not to exceed six months, or both. For each conviction thereafter he shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or to be confined in the county jail not to exceed six months, or both, and any building or part of building or inclosure or land used for such infraction of the law shall be securely closed for a period of thirty days against all use whatsoever, and if any person so convicted was operating under a license, his license shall be suspended for a like period."

The bill presented by Senator MacMurray is a part of a national campaign sponsored by the Lord's Day Alliance, of which Rev. Harry L. Bowlby of New York is the executive head. Dr. Bowlby's statement is that the campaign is on in forty-three states.

Concerning the movies Dr. Bowlby said: "If the movies don't clean up on six days in the week and clear out on the seventh day, our sword is unsheathed and we will fight them to a finish."

In Chicago the Rev. H. D. Foster heads the movement. There will be a strong lobby back of the bill.

They must like the job of movie censor in this city, for a young army appeared at the City Hall to take the Civil Service tests, and as there are only three jobs to be filled, forty-four of the forty-seven who showed up will lose out on the coveted position.

Paul Biese, well known movie and dance orchestra leader, celebrated his birthday last week at a party at the Edgewater Beach Hotel. On the way home after the festivities some bold robbers held him up and got away with several thousand dollars worth of jewelry. The robbers out here not only rob the stars but also the leaders, so the best plan is to leave 'em in the bank.

Bob Ravencroft, well known to the Movie Row, is reported as making good as manager of the Palace Theatre at Mason City, Iowa.

Charley Morton of the Family Theatre at Mt. Carroll now has another theatre added to his string. His latest addition is the Grand Theatre at Galena, which he has reopened after a several months' shutdown.

William S. Barbee of the Barbee Theatre has transferred an interest in the property to Thomas Shutt for an indicated $15,000. He has also sold to Thomas A. Barbee 100 by 125 feet of vacant land at the southeast corner of Halsted and 89th streets for an indicated $5,000, subject to $3,000 mortgage.

While the legitimate theatres face an early closing in some cases, perhaps the earliest in many years, the downtown movie houses are turning them away. Here is the New McVickers holding over "Bella Donna" for the second week on account of the crowds, the Chicago Theatre playing to capacity every night, the Roosevelt holding feature pictures for weeks at a stretch. Now comes the Wood Theatre with an extended run of "The Covered Wagon." Here is Manager McCready of the Randolph Theatre planning to show the Snow animal pictures for a three months' run, and so it goes. Verily, the movies get them.

Well, the boys will get into politics. Here is Eddie Fellis of the Orpheum at Hillsboro being elected supervisor and next we will hear of some manager being made mayor of a town with no Sunday movies.

The song writers' society is surely killing the goose that laid the golden eggs. Not only are they keeping after the movie managers but now they say the radio broadcasting stations must pay them a tax. The result is that the radio stations have cut out sending the copyrighted music and they will lose all this free advertising that they could not buy for love or money.

Noah Bloomer is opening the Dreamland Theatre at Belleville. He will continue to look after his theatre at Freeburg and book for both houses.

Mrs. Katherine McKee has taken over the management of the Liberty theatre at Liberty, Ill., again.

Sometimes the life of a manager in this city gets rough. Here is Earl Hill of the Star Theatre on Fullerton avenue getting banged up by a gang of rowdies after he put one of them out of the house for creating a disturbance. Some of the gangs ought to be in jail and the best plan is to call in the police to do the job.

Combination of theatres goes merrily on in this territory with the acquisition of the Midway Theatre at Rockford by the Lamb, Burford, Ruben and Thielen interests. The boys now control eighteen houses in eight cities.

The report is that Fox will build a large house in the Loop district that will be devoted to first runs of Fox specials. With the erection of a theatre here and one in Boston it is said that the Fox circuit will comprise fifty houses. Now that Universal has the Randolph Theatre for first runs, the Paramount, the New McVickers, etc., the city will be sure to get all the first runs on time hereafter instead of waiting for a small-town showing.

The new Rivoli Theatre at Elston, Montrose and Crawford avenues, under the management of Haferkamp & Hill, reports a fine business for the opening week, and with plenty of good music from the Rivoli Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Prof. M. Edelman, and organ recitals with Miss Margaret Hall at the keys, the crowds keep on coming. The theatre seats 1,250 and is of the highest type of neighborhood house. The Rivoli will present high class programs with plenty of music every day in the week.

Mayor William E. Dever gives the movie theatres a lot of credit for his election, as many of the houses ran slides and movie trailers boosting him and helped to educate the people that a change was needed.

Madge Bellamy of the Ince Studios while in the city last week made personal appearances at several of the neighborhood houses.

The last call has been sent out for the state meeting here on April 18 and 19 at the Sherman Hotel, and President L. M. Rubens of Joliet and Secretary Louis H. Frank are busy as beavers getting ready for the big meeting.

The many friends of Louis Bloom of the Lawndale Theatre are glad to hear he is back on the job after a tussle with a spell of sickness.

John Dittman of the Lindo Theatre at Freeport believes in going the limit in advertising his big features. With the assistance of Walt Nealand of the Goldwyn he put over a big campaign on "The Christian" and played to capacity.

Otto Clark and James Anderson have taken over the Electric Theatre at Anderson from David L. Mickey and will make some improvements in the house.

W. Pearl, owner of the Pearl Theatre at Highland Park, plans to build a new house on East Central avenue in that suburb and has purchased a site 200 by 75 feet. Work will begin in the near future.

E. B. Phillips has sold his theatre at Spencer to H. E. Campbell, who has begun to remodel the house.

Among the visitors along Film Row last week were Jack Hoefler of the Orpheum Theatre at Quincy, W. W. Watts of Springfield, John Ditman of the Strand Theatre at Peoria and Charley Pyle of the New Virginia Theatre at Champaign.

Now that the exchange men have the ball fever, some of the managers think they can lick them and talk of organizing a team to show them the tall grass.

Another big bill is on at the McVickers this week, with Frances White in person and Gloria Swanson in her latest, "The Prodigal Daughter."

Aaron Saperstein has added the Lexington Theatre at 715 South Crawford avenue to his chain of houses, which in addition include the Lincoln and the Palace Royal. He will book for all three houses.

Well, the fashion show has struck Evanston and Clyde Elliott had a big one on in a tie-up with the local stores that packed the house to capacity.

The Victoria Theatre at Sheffield and Balmont avenues, for some time past the home of a stock company, is now showing Paramount pictures, with five acts of vaudeville. Henry E. Rehfield and Elmer A. Johnson are the managers under the new policy and report good business with the new programs. New equipment has been installed, including two Motiographs, and the house will be fixed up in tip-top shape for a good business this summer. The Victoria Amusement Company is in charge of the property now and it will be the aim of the new management to furnish only the best in pictures and vaudeville.

Charles H. Ryan of the Garfield Theatre now drives a new special sport Durant sedan to and from the golf links.

Jimmy Cullen, assistant manager of the Terminal Theatre at Lawrence and Spaulding avenue, is there when it comes to remembering names and faces of the patrons of the theatre. He always has a smile for the folks and it helps to keep the house filled with satisfied movie fans.

The Consolidated Theatre Company in the McCormick Building has received plans from F. E. Fowler for a new house it is going to erect at Anderson, Ind., and a good site on Meriden avenue has been bought for the new theatre, which will cost at least $75,000 and will be modern in every way.

LaPorte will have another new theatre soon, as architects are preparing plans for a theatre one story in height to cost $75,000 and occupy a plot 100 by 130 feet.

Donald Best of Galva plans to erect a small movie theatre on Market street of that little city and plans will soon be ready.

Manager McCready of the Randolph Theatre is putting in a real lobby display for the big game feature and is fixing up both the State street and Randolph street entrances so the customers will want to go home and get into their hunting togs to take part in the sport. There will be elephants and everything. The display will cost a lot of real money, but as Mac thinks the picture is good for several weeks, it will be a good investment.

Ezra Rhodes has closed a lease for the new Blackstone Theatre at South Bend at a rental of $126,000 for the first five years and $132,000 for the second five years.

D. V. Taute has been made assistant manager of the Randolph Theatre under Manager McCready. He was formerly connected with the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis and is well known to the trade in the Hoosier capital.

The management of the Chicago Theatre has solved the problem of getting the shoppers in early for the afternoon show by offering bargain rates up to 1 o'clock each afternoon. By hurrying a little the women get to see the full show and get a real bargain to boot.

The Auditorium Theatre at South Bend will be rebuilt this summer and the house will be as good as new when the job is finished.

The Lincoln Hippodrome is using a mixed program of vaudeville and pictures and reports good business this month. The headliner for next week is the personal appearance of Polly Moran, the sheriff of the movies.

The movie patrons of the Tri Cities, Moline, Rock Island and Davenport, are getting the latest and best in the movies. Last week's bills, for instance, included George Beban and his company in "The Sign of the Rose" at the new Le Claire in Moline, the Spencer Theatre showed Charlie Chaplin in "The Pilgrim," the Fort Armstrong in Rock Island came out strong with Pola Negri in "Bella Donna" and the Garden Theatre in Davenport had Jackie Coogan in "Daddy."

For the first time in weeks the real estate sections of the Chicago papers fail to mention anything about another new theatre to be built somewhere in the city. There is hardly a week goes by but some new theatrical project is mentioned in the newspapers.

Charley Boutin of the Opera House at Janesville has taken over the management of the Majestic Theatre of that city from Mrs. Sadie S. Smith.

Orrie and Walter Buss have purchased the Kewaskum Theatre and will make some improvements.

Another movie theatre is planned for Spring Valley by Louis Murphy who will build a 500-seat house. The Cassidy Brothers will build a combination office store and theatre building at an early date.

The management of the Coliseum, where the big movie convention and show is to be held, are planning to double-deck the interior of the building so that at least 50,000 square feet will be added to the display space available for use of exhibitors of the various shows and expositions held in the building.

Albert Fuchs, owner of the Chateau Theatre block and apartments, is having plans drawn for a million dollar apartment building on Bittersweet Place near Sheridan Road.

Montana

The well appointed and pretty People's Theatre, under the management of Mr. Bailey, a veteran theatre king, has been giving the people of Butte, Mont., decidedly fine programs all through the year and holding the same production at longer periods than any other theatre in the city. Mr. Bailey inaugurated the sliding scale of prices with some of the expensive films with satisfactory results. One of his latest pictures to have a two weeks' run at 55 cents was "Robin Hood." This played to capacity at each showing. This week "Adam's Rib," with matinees at 25 cents and nights at 35 cents, is doing a splendid business.

Mr. Bailey is an exhibitor with ideas, and he is as fearless about putting them into play as he is original, and somehow he always finds the pay streak. He says in his advertisement, "We pay more and use fewer, so ours should be better."

Manager W. J. Sullivan, of the American and the Rialto theatres, gave a dancing party to his employes and their friends, extending invitations to all the exchange managers and their employes, on Easter Wednesday evening at the close of the theatre's entertainment. The dance was held in the hall of the American. The orchestras of the two theatres furnished the music. Refreshments were served.

Texas Showman Dies When Automobile Turns Turtle

Hershel I. Smith, owner of the Palace Theatre at Wortham, Texas, was killed at 6 p. m. April 1, when an automobile he was driving turned over, pinning him underneath. Bob Nunn, riding with him, was injured. Mr. Smith was brought to a doctor's office in Corsicanna, where he died soon after. His back was broken and left side crushed. The body is being held by a local undertaker at Corsicanna awaiting word from relatives. He is said to have a wife and family in Bremond, Texas.

Incorporation: Oil Fields Amusement Club, Orange, Texas. Capital stock, $1,000. Incorporators, N. F. Walker, Frank Bass and D. R. Peak.

Don Gilpin has purchased the Queen Theatre at Frederick, Okla., and will redecorate and add new equipment.

T. A. Shea will build a new picture theatre at McGhee, Ark.

The Best Theatre was opened at Helena, Ark., March 25 to capacity business.

J. P. Brundidge has commenced work on the new Hope Theatre at Alice, Ark. It will be modern and fireproof.

The Saenger Amusement Company will erect a new $100,000 modern theatre at Pine Bluff, Ark.

Price McCall has started the construction of a new picture theatre at Mena, Ark., to cost $15,000. The building will be 48x140 in size and will seat 600 in auditorium and 150 in balcony.

Robbers entered the office of the Main Street Theatre at Kansas City Monday night and after overpowering the cashier abstracted over $6,000 in cash and made their escape, leaving no clew as to their identity.

The Royal Theatre at Van Buren, Ark., has been purchased by J. C. Dotson and will be moved to the Opera House building, formerly occupied by the Victory Theatre. The Victory Theatre will be moved to the Clay Building at 711 Main street.

John Hicks of Oklahoma City has purchased the Crystal Theatre at Booneville, Ark., from Mr. Donathan.

Charles B. Clarke has purchased the Royal Theatre at Malvern, Ark., from H. L. McDonald and will add new equipment and make improvements.

Harry M. Paul has taken over the management of the Dunlap Theatre at Clarksville, Ark., and will add new equipment.

John Kunsky Concentrating on Seven Detroit Theatres

John H. Kunsky will give up his lease on the Linwood-LaSalle Theatre the first of August, at which time it will pass to the owner. It is not known who will operate the house after August 1. With the passing of this house, Mr. Kunsky will concentrate on the DeLuxe, Alhambra and Strand theatres in the neighborhoods, and the Adams, Capitol, Madison and Columbia downtown. Where at one time Mr. Kunsky operated ten theatres, he will be operating only seven after August 1.

Hunter Robbins, proprietor of the Robinhood Theatre, Gand Haven, Mich., who has been wintering in California since early last fall, is expected home May 1.

John H. Kunsky, president of the Kunsky Enterprises, Detroit, advised the World correspondent upon his return from California that the Hollywood studios were extremely busy and that from what he could see the coming year will have more big pictures and better pictures.

Otto J. Lauer, for many years a theatre manager connected with the Fitzpatrick & McElroy Circuit, is confined to the Trinity Annex Hospital, Milwaukee, Wis., for serious eye trouble. The World hopes for his speedy recovery.

Axel Lownquist, of the Lownquist Driver Land Company, Chicago, was in Dearborn, Mich., recently and took an option on some property on which he states a large theatre will be erected.

Elwyn Simons, of the New Family Theatre, Adrian, Mich., has decided to build a new theatre there that will seat 600 people. Plans have been completed and actual work will start within sixty days. It is expected to have the house in readiness by September 1.

By a vote of 362 to 248 the people of Munsing at the April elections voted to keep the theatres closed on Sundays.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Butterfield (he operates a big circuit of theatres in Michigan) will be at home after April 15 at Gull Lake, Augusta, Mich., their summer residence. They are just completing a three-week honeymoon trip in the South.

Bert E. C. Silver, proprietor of the Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich., has been elected mayor of the town.

George W. Trendle, general manager of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, announces that both the Adams and Madison theatres will be completely redecorated and recarpeted during June and July.

It is the intention of Manager Tom Moule of the Capitol Theatre, Detroit, to have a special series of added attractions at the matinees. A few weeks ago he had a well-known golf "pro" give demonstrations on the stage. The next week he had the Misses MacFadden, daughters of Bernard MacFadden, give lectures of particular interest to women.

Cincinnati

It has just been authoritatively learned that a theatrical pool combining the Keith interests and those of John Harris, of Pittsburgh, and I. Lisbon, of Cincinnati, has completed final negotiations for the purchase of the Lyric Theatre, one of the largest and most pretentious houses in Cincinnati, located in the very heart of the downtown commercial and theatrical district.

Although the exact purchase price could not be ascertained, it is understood from a reliable source that it is in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, including the upper floors of offices.

The Lyric has been in litigation for some time and is being operated temporarily by Libson, who is manager of a chain of large downtown picture houses and a member of the group of theatrical men who have now acquired the property.

The house has had a varied combination of policies, having been originally the home of Shubert road attractions. When the new Shubert house was built here the Lyric was taken over by the Loew interests and vaudeville installed, but this flopped miserably. MacMahon & Jackson then leased the house for pictures and continued to operate it until a few months ago, when Ralph Dunbar took up the lease and installed his company in a repertoire of musical productions. The venture, however, was not adequately supported and the Dunbar contingent closed some thirty days ago, since which time Libson has had the house for pictures.

Details concerning the future of the house are not at this time available.

Bucyrus, Ohio, experienced its first Blue Law Sunday this week, the mayor's edict closing all places of business. Movie houses, however, operated under a court ruling restraining the mayor from interference. Hotels, lunchrooms, news stands and places dispensing actual necessities were allowed to remain open. Exhibitors are jubilant over the situation and are telling the mayor where to get off.

Cleveland

The Crawford Theatre, at the corner of St. Clair avenue and East 148th street, Cleveland, is being torn down and soon will be replaced with a commercial building housing a 600-seat theatre, a number of stores and offices on the second floor. The improvement will represent an investment of $100,000. Joseph Laronge and Louis Abrams have acquired control of the property and will put up the new building.

Whether or not this house when completed will be operated by Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., is not announced, but Joseph Laronge is treasurer and vice-president of this company, and very likely will make a contract with the Loew people, as he did with the New Doan Theatre, on St. Clair avenue and East 105th street. The New Doan will be ready to open about August 15 and the Crawford a short time later.

The new policy in the State Theatre evidently is winning out for that house. Feature pictures and vaudeville is the program. The crowds have been steadily increasing week after week.

Larry Jacobs, assistant manager of the Opera House, Mansfield, Ohio, was a Cleveland visitor last week. He came in to get track of some new exploitation stunts, and by the smile on his face evidently landed what he was after.

Fred Desberg, general manager of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., of Cleveland, is taking his first vacation in eight years. He and Mrs. Desberg left for French Lick Springs on April 9.

This Seattle Eve Outspeeds Exhibitorial Adams, They Say

When it comes to fast work, Mrs. Exhibitor can put it all over the average "he" exhibitor.

"Good morning, Mrs. Malone," quoth an exchange man to the proprietor of the Colonial Theatre, Charleston, Wash., early Monday forenoon.

"I'll say it's a good morning," replied the energetic lady. "I got up this morning, swept out the theatre, changed the lobby, put up a 24-sheet, got my husband's breakfast, tidied up my home and here I am!"

The clock on the exchange wall registered exactly 9:37, and Charleston is over an hour from Seattle by boat!

Seattle exhibitors are offering some exceptionally well balanced bills this week. Two independent productions are pulling good houses in competition with the other bills. At the Blue Mouse "The Beautiful and Damned" is proving popular with large audiences. "Sure-Fire Flint" at the Liberty, in connection with "Bull Montana's "Rob 'Em Good," is providing plenty of mirth to compensate for the heartaches in "Mighty Lak a Rose" at the Coliseum and the melodrama of "The Christian" at the Strand. Vitagraph's "Ninety and Nine" is scoring heavily at the Columbia. Fans seem appreciative, as good business is reported at all the houses in question. Over at the Winter Garden, Manager Edwards reports the third largest Sunday in the history of the house, with Hodkinson's "Headless Horseman."

When O. O. Ruth put on "Dr. Jack" at his Mission Theatre, Mount Vernon, Wash., the audience made so much noise in expressing appreciation that the organist actually had to stop playing, drowned out by the hilarity of the crowd!

Through investigation it has come to light that dozens of Japanese-made pictures, for Japanese only, have been shown in the Japanese district of Seattle during the past few months, without the knowledge or sanction of the censor board. The title of the picture under investigation at the present time is "The American Family," billed to be shown in Japanese Hall, Maynard avenue and Washington street, by S. Miyazaki, importer of films.

Miyazaki said his film could not be seen by Americans as it was entirely for the entertainment of his people, but was unable to explain the plot to the satisfaction of the censors, who have forbidden the further showing of any such films without their being subjected first to the regular review. A second film, billed to be shown the following week, was entitled "The Mother's Sin." Miyazaki says he imports these pictures from Hawaii. He will "try and arrange a showing for the censors."

A new precedent has just been established with the promise of an early return showing of "The Pilgrim" and the "Toll of the Sea" to the Strand Theatre, early in May. This is the first local record of an entire bill playing a repeat, nor does the Strand ever play return engagements. Manager Wright has been besieged with requests for a return engagement and secured the first possible moment to bring back the bill. Its initial showing at the Strand was early in March.

Henry Newman of the Arcade and Liberty theatres, Hoquiam, Wash., was the first exhibitor to have a screening on Universal's "Abysmal Brute" shortly after its arrival. Forgetting his alleged "exhibitors' mask of indifference" in his interest and pleasure in the picture, Newman finally came to with a start.

"I suppose these outbursts are going to cost me more money," he declared, "but it was worth it."

"Not a sou," answered Manager Schlaifer, who had been enjoying the exhibitor as much as he did the film.

Manager R. W. Case of the Columbia Theatre has invited members of the scenario story writing extension class of the University of Washington, interested in the Laemmle $1,000 scholarship, to review every film shown at the Columbia while the contest is open. The class meets in the Henry Building under the instruction of Mrs. Frank Pease, who studied under Prof. Baker of Harvard.

The Burien Theatre, Mrs. L. F. White, has been closed for the summer.

Blue Mouse theatres in Seattle and Tacoma are promising patrons the Warner Brothers' Screen Classics, "Brass," "Main Street," "Little Church Around the Corner" and "The Beautiful and Damned." The last named is playing there this week.

E. G. Abbott, of Sedro Woolley's Dream Theatre, has booked "Safety Last" for the longest run he has ever had.

Ministers in Wenatchee, Wash., objected to the local censor board that "The Pilgrim" was a burlesque on sacred things. W. L. Doudlah of the Liberty Theatre wired over to the Seattle exchange for a print, which was viewed by the censors. They passed it 100 per cent and declared their opinion that the film was not a burlesque as had been claimed, according to word just received from the exhibitor, who will play it shortly.

"The Drug Traffic" is having its premiere Northwest showing in Tacoma this week and is attracting big houses.

Los Angeles

Sid Grauman gave "The Covered Wagon" a very auspicious opening at his Hollywood Egyptian Palace. He put the price of admission up to $2.75 per and had everybody come in full dress with everybody who is anybody, including Director Horne, all the members of the cast and himself, making personal appearances on the stage.

Manager Fred Miller of the California held "Souls for Sale" over for a second big week

All the big first run theatres have gone in for extended runs except Grauman's new Metropolitan Theatre and his Million Dollar playhouse. The theatres now booking for long runs include the Rialto, Loew's State, California, Mission, Kinema, Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, Miller's and Tally's.

It was only a little more than a year ago that the Mission and Rialto were the only theatres booking for long runs.

Fred Miller is doing a big business with "Grandma's Boy" at his Main Street Theatre. It previously ran for four months at the Symphony.

E. C. Berstick is going after the house record for a three weeks' run at his Loew's State Theatre with "Where the Pavement Ends."

Jack Root, the new manager at the Mission, is spending his week ends at Pasadena when he has time.

Canada

K. Keltie, owner of the picture theatre at Yarmouth, N. S., is remodeling his house from top to bottom.

Robert Stevens has made a fine initial success of the new Espanola Theatre at Espanola, Northern Ontario. Although this theatre seats only 425, the cost of construction was $40,000, and the house is attractive in every respect. Mr. Stevens has organized a four-piece orchestra.

Manager I. Allen, of the Globe Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., broke all house attendance records in the presentation of "The Game of Life," the English production, during a recent two weeks' engagement.

James Adams has been appointed manager of the Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, by the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation. Mr. Adams was transferred to Calgary from the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., Victor Winning, of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, being appointed to the management of the Dominion Theatre.

The Rex Theatre, at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec, was the scene of a fire recently which destroyed films valued at $800. When the films caught fire P. Klin, the operator, left the booth, closing the fireproof door, and notified the manager, who announced to the crowd that something had happened in the projection room and that the patrons should leave at once. The crowd went out in orderly fashion, after which the flames were extinguished. The manager of the house is G. H. Jerome.

The Orpheum Theatre, Montreal, long the home of dramatic stock, has become a picture house permanently. Pictures presented and booked include "The Game of Life," "The Rapids," "Latin Love," "Glengarry School Days," "Blue Waters" and "The Drug Menace."

Pittsburgh

After having managed the Orpheum Theatre at Clarksburg, W. Va., for eight years, E. L. Richardson has resigned his position to accept one with the Home Furnishing Company. Mr. Richardson's successor at the theatre has as yet not been named.

The Star Theatre at New Castle has been leased by James Passas and James Caplanis, local men.

Alpheus Miller, of Washington, has leased the Opera House at Waynesburg, and already has begun refinishing the interior. Pictures will be changed every other night.

G. W. Hall, of the Lyric Theatre, Monongah, W. Va., was in town the past week. Hall leaves in a few days for Los Angeles for a six months' vacation. Oh, for the life of an exhibitor.

N. Braverman has purchased the Lawrence Theatre, located at 4829 Second avenue, Hazelewood, Pittsburgh, from J. Weinberger. The new owner has renamed the house Old Faithful.

T. Kearse, well-known exhibitor from Charleston, W. Va., has returned home after several days' stay in New York City.

Charles F. Silveus, of the Eclipse Theatre, Waynesburg, and J. K. Gearhart, of the Regent of Templeton, were among the out-of-town visitors on Film Row the past week.

San Francisco's Expansion Brings More Picture Houses

Despite the fact that several large new picture houses have been opened in San Francisco during the past year, others are in course of construction, illustrating the rapid growth of the city in population and the popularity of this form of entertainment. Special attention is being paid to the construction of theatres in the residence districts and some of the new houses vie in size and appointments with the leading downtown theatres.

Work is well under way on the construction of the new Alexandria Theatre at Eighteenth avenue and Geary street, and more than 400 merchants of the district recently paraded the neighborhood, led by trucks bearing fifty tons of steel to be used in this house. The theatre will be of Egyptian design and will seat about 2,000. It is being built by Alec Levin.

Another project on which work has commenced is the erection of an 1,800-seat house at Buchanan and Union streets for S. H. Levin. The new Fox Theatre in the suburban city of Oakland is rapidly nearing completion and its opening will probably be an event of May.

The National Theatres Syndicate of California, headed by L. R. Crook, formerly with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, is perfecting its plans for building up a chain of picture houses. Offices are maintained in the Loew Building on Market street.

Jack Partington, general manager of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, is getting in the class of a communter between this city and Los Angeles, recently making two trips there within a week. The last trip was made to attend the opening of "The Covered Wagon."

Some California exhibitors are waking up to the fact that Western films are getting the money in the theatres and are spreading the news that Westerns are coming back. The wise ones in the business merely state that these films never went away and point out the fact that good, clean Western stories have always been in demand. Even the big producing companies are now bringing out this type of film attraction.

Arrangements have been made for opening the redecorated Imperial Theatre on April 17, the attraction to be "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

The house record of the Granada Theatre was broken recently on the opening day of the engagement of "Grumpy," and this production is so well thought of by the management that it will be transferred to the New Portola Theatre at the expiration of the engagement of the Snow African game picture.

John Triguerio, the pioneer exhibitor of Fort Bragg, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, making final arrangements for service for the new Liberty Theatre, to be opened at an early date.

Louis Greenfield, now sole owner of the former Kahn & Greenfield circuit of theatres, has transferred Fabello from the New Mission Theatre, San Francisco, to the New Fillmore Theatre, where he has been given charge of a new orchestra. Billy Hamilton, long the pianist with Fabello, succeeds him as leader at the New Mission. The New Fillmore Novelty Artists will be the name of the musical aggregation at the Fillmore street house, while the one at the Mission street theatre will be known as the New Mission Jazz Orchestra.

F. A. Flater, at one time manager of the Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, and now general manager of all Universal theatres, was a recent visitor, having come west to open a new theatre at Salt Lake City. The staff of the Frolic Theatre has been augmented by the addition of D. S. Conner, formerly of the Granada Theatre, who is now assistant to Manager Joseph F. Enos.

The usherettes of the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, have organized a swimming club and challenged other organizations of girls to meet them in the tanks. They are being trained by "Scoop" Gleason, of aquatic fame.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" has been booked by the Century Theatre, San Francisco, to commence May 12.

Charles M. Pincus has been placed in charge of the publicity and advertising department of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment and now has the assistance of five workers in this line. A new style three-sheet has been adopted for the houses of this circuit, the type three-sheet having been cast aside in favor of an engraved three-sheet poster in colors.

Joel H. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Ltd., has arranged to sail for Honolulu late in April.

A suit has been filed by Mrs. Ann Homeyer in the Superior Court of San Francisco against the Park-Presidio Theatre Company for damages in the sum of $7,000 for injuries she said she incurred a year ago when she tripped while walking down the aisle of the theatre. She contends that the management was negligent in not properly lighting the house.

Joseph Vickery, of Sydney, New South Wales, was a recent arrival at San Francisco to make an extended stay for the benefit of his health. He recently deeded to the Central Methodist Mission the Lyceum Theatre of Sydney, in which moving pictures are now presented every week night, while on Sundays it is devoted to religious purposes.

The Man Behind

F. H. RICHARDSON

The projectionist sat in his room back behind
And watched all the screen figures wiggle;
He wrinkled his nose and stroked his thin hair.
Then treated himself to a giggle.

He watched Norma Talmadge move gracefully 'round,
Then remarked to himself with a grin:
You're getting a wad of the long green, my dear,
Don't you think you had better wade in

And do some real work to earn all that dough,
Which with all my hard labor I've missed?
Sure! You certainly should! Get a gait, Norma, dear,
Sprint around! Speed 'er up! Get atwist!

The projectionist moved a small dingus a bit;
'Twasn't much, but it gave things a wallop,
And Norma, poor dear, proceeded right then
To go through the scene at a gallop.

The soul kiss the hero had made last so long
Was done in one-fourth of a second,
While the pose the Cow Eye had enjoyed so much
Lasted very much less than he'd reckoned.

The projectionist winked his left eye at himself,
As he watched how, like cute little monkeys,
The "Great Ones" all moved as he made them to move,
Though it turned them from human to donkeys.

Doug Fairbanks, quoth he, wouldn't e'en look at me,
But, b'gosh, I'm his boss while he's here.
He thinks he's some pumpkins, but merely IS punk
If I give him the wrong kind of steer.

For I am the boy who can make 'em step 'round,
Or float 'long like a breeze-driven feather.
I can paint the sky o'er with shadows of black
That the finest day looks like foul weather.

I make of a funeral procession a race,
And out of a race make a joke;
By discolored light I can paint up the nose
Of a saint till he looks like a "soak."

I can make the producer a very proud man
By displaying his goods the best way,
Or it's easy for me to make it all look
Like what the cat dragged in today.

The projectionist sat in his room back behind
And watched all the screen figures wiggle;
As he pondered on what he could do to all that
He treated himself to a giggle.

Out of all of their art I can make super art,
Or can make it a very punk show.
Well, the programme is done, it's time to go home,
So I'll lock up and go down below.

Albany Showmen Differ on Question of Sunday Shows

Albany, N. Y., exhibitors have split on the question of Sunday shows. While some of the exhibitors, including Samuel Suckno, owner of four houses in the Capital City, favor asking the common council for an ordinance giving Albany theatres the same privileges now enjoyed by Troy and Schenectady houses, other exhibitors, including Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal, are open in saying that they will oppose the movement from start to finish. The exhibitors have held two or three meetings lately to discuss the situation. As a result of opposition which has come from certain exhibitors, it is not likely that any attempt will be made at the present time towards bringing about Sunday shows in Albany. There is no question but that the city itself would favor Sunday shows, for hundreds each week visit Troy and Schenectady on Sundays and leave many dollars in these two places.

Exhibitors in town during the past week included Julius Thompson, of Hudson; George Loomis, of Frankfort; Lew Fischer, of Fort Edward; L. L. Conners, of Cambridge; Charles McCarthy, of Hoosick Falls; F. C. Yelverton, of Ballston, and William Benton, of Saratoga Springs.

Following a season of burlesque, the Majestic in Albany may return to pictures.

The Leland, in Albany, has booked five Fox specials for early showing. "The Town That Forgot God" will be featured the week of April 23.

Rolling into town in a bright yellow Pierce Arrow car, Samuel Goldstein, of Springfield, Mass., head of a sixteen-theatre circuit in that state, gave Albany exhibitors and exchange men something to talk about the past week and incidentally to comment that business in Massachusetts must have been fairly good the past winter.

Myer Schine, head of one of the big chains in New York State, announces having booked "Safety Last" for the entire circuit.

Dr. and Mrs. Wilson, of Watertown, N. Y., entertained the employes of the Olympic, Palace and Antique theatres of that city at a dinner and dance one night last week. About forty were present. Dr. Wilson, who handles the three houses, celebrated his twenty-fifth wedding anniversary last week.

For the first time in its history, the Barcli of Schenectady, owned and run by James J. Walker, is trying out a serial in "The Haunted Valley." According to Mr. Walker, it is bringing him business.

Miss Janet Noon, who runs the Crescent in Schenectady, and runs it well, has a new car. Miss Noon, however, has paid so much attention to conducting her theatre during the last four or five years that she hardly knows the streets of her own city. This fact came out last week, when Miss Noon volunteered to take one of the Albany exchange managers to a neighborhood house, and then admitted that she didn't know the streets over which she must travel. As a means out of the difficulty, one of the house employes was taken along.

Ormond Roberts is following in the footsteps of his father, George Roberts, manager of the Hudson and Colonial, in Albany, for W. W. Berinstein, having just been named as manager of Palace, in Troy.

Bob Landry, of Ogdensburg, and R. J. Henry, of Plattsburg, will erect a 1,200-seat house in the former place this summer. William Benton has broken ground for a new house in Whitehall.

According to all reports, business is picking up in the Adirondack region and the theatres are coining money.

W. W. Berinstein arrived in town from Elmira on Saturday, and the day following, in company with George Roberts, visited Little Falls, where a new house is being erected.

Jacob Rosenthal of the New Rose, in Troy, announces Mr. Saperstein as house manager. Mr. Saperstein formerly ran a house in Bristol, Conn., and has been connected with Harmanus Bleecker Hall in Albany.

James Chest opened his new house in Middleburg last Saturday, using "The Storm" as a feature.

Thomas H. Martell, of New York, director of bookings for the theatres maintained at the army posts in this country, was in Albany the past week. At Plattsburg shows are now given the soldiers three nights a week, the same holding good at Fort Niagara, while Madison barracks gets four nights a week. Mr. Martell said that motion pictures were to be one of the big features of entertainment at the summer military encampment at Plattsburg this year.

Still Sheiking the Shekels

Rodolph Valentino and his wife visited Buffalo, N. Y., a week ago. His dance stuff in the Broadway Auditorium was not a howling success. A general razz was passed out by the newspapers, of which the following extracts are examples:

"Valentino night was a great night—for Rodolph. He came, he saw, he got away with murder, as the saying goes. Those who went to get a closeup of the gent who made sheiking a pleasure, got what they went for if they had $1.65 plus tax."

"The program was less than ½ of 1 per cent dancing. The other 99 was bull devoted to a review of Rody's quarrel with the motion picture trusts. And how that boy can hate!"

"The only thing that smacked of the Arabian was the manager's visit to the box office, where he counted the shekels, folded up his bank roll and silently moved away."

"And what do you suppose he talked about? Well, you'd be surprised! He spent about ten minutes putting a certain movie corporation on the 'pan,' because, he declared, its members were, so to speak, of the great unwashed."

"And then Rody smiled again, showed his pretty, pearly white teeth and wished the several thousand spectators, who had drawn on the exchequer, a good night and sweet dreams. The several thousand spectators looked at each other and then looked at the stage. The Sheik was making a graceful exit! They looked at each other again. And they realized that when he had said good night, he really had meant it."

And so on and so forth was the gentle raspberry rolled along. Valentino and wife have appeared in Buffalo, Rochester, Binghamton, Elmira and other New York towns during the past few weeks.

Rochester

With the close of the concert season, the Eastman Theatre has inaugurated a change of policy in the presentation of motion picture programs. Heretofore, with few exceptions, every Wednesday has been given over to concerts in the theatres. Preparation of the stage setting took up the afternoons, and in the evenings the concerts were given. Pictures were shown on the other six days of the week. Now, however, there will be picture presentations seven afternoons and seven evenings, which will continue until the concert season reopens in the fall.

Want a cigar? Call on Bill Fait at the Eastman. Sure, whadaya think? It's a boy. Eight pounds. Mrs. Fait doing fine. Name? Bill, Jr., of course. Congratulations, Bill.

Jack Farren, manager of the Victoria Theatre, screened Tex Rickard's Firpo-Brennan fight pictures for a few friends and himself in the "Vic" screening room last Wednesday.

Cass Stahley, manager of the Rose Garden Theatre, and Mort Howell, of the Lincoln, Forded to Buffalo last week-end to sign up some of the super-specials at the various exchanges.

E. G. Dodds, of Syracuse, where he has been handling independent films, has been appointed general manager of the Associated Theatres, Inc., interests in Corning, N. Y., including the State, Liberty, Princess and Regent theatres. Mr. Dodds is well known in this part of the state. He was at one time manager of the Educational Exchange in Buffalo.

Work will soon be started on a new theatre in Geddes street, next to the Webster millinery shop. The house is being built by George McCargo and F. W. Gates, proprietors of the Lyric. The building will be one story in height, 100 feet long by 35 feet wide. Construction will be of tile, with a brick front. The house will seat 500.

James H. Moore, Detroit theatre magnate, came all the way from the automobile city just to have a chat one day last week with his veteran manager and friend, J. H. Finn, manager of the Temple Theatre. This house recently passed out of Mr. Moore's hands into the control of the B. F. Keith interests.

"I just dropped in to pay a friendly visit to Mickie," he explained in answer to a question concerning his visit here. "There was no business connected with my trip. Just wanted to have a chat with Mickie."

The Keith interests will take formal control of the Temple on June 4, said Mr. Moore.

The Regorson Corporation has signed up for the showing at one of its houses of Metro's "Trailing African Wild Animals," the Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson production. The Avon in Utica, the Strand in Schenectady and the Olympic in Watertown, N. Y., have also booked this jungle feature.

Mr. and Mrs. Rodolph Valentino were in town Tuesday evening, April 10, to stage their dancing stuff in Convention Hall. A goodly crowd was there.

Buffalo Motion Picture Co. Files Bankruptcy Petition

The Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation has gone on the rocks. This company, of about five years' standing, and which at one time had Earl L. Crabb, former manager of the old local Strand and now manager of the System in Syracuse, as its general manager, with headquarters in New York City, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Liabilities of $71,238 and assets of $11,876 are set forth in the petition signed by E. A. Jones, vice-president. Among the liabilities is a note of $9,000 to the People's Bank. Practically all of the rest was owed to eight Buffalo men—J. J. Roesch, Peter Ernst, E. E. Person, E. A. Jones, G. P. Spohr, L. E. Moschel, W. J. Simon and J. W. Lansing. The assets include $8,858 in posters and advertising accessories, contracts amounting to $18,575, which will not be due, however, until the pictures are shown, and three completed pictures of unknown values. The company has offices in the Ellicott Square.

Western New York exhibitors and exchange men will be shocked to learn of the sudden death of Colonel F. L. Schweppe, proprietor of the Colonial and Amusu theatres in Elmira, N. Y., who was taken to the hospital on April 12 suffering with pneumonia and who died on the 13th. "Colonel" Schweppe was one of the best known showmen in the Southern Tier and was very popular. He came to Buffalo often to visit his many friends along Film Row.

Jacob Rosing, one of the owners of the Lafayette Square Theatre, has taken his family on a trip over the big pond. There was a farewell party in the theatre on April 9, when a large time was had by all.

Sale of the Temple Theatre, on Walnut street, Lockport, by Henry F. Thurston to the J. Meyer Schine Syndicate of Gloversville, will not cause any change in the operating personnel. The new owners took over the house this week. It was in May, 1907, that Mr. Thurston started the construction of the Walton Rink, now the Temple Theatre. The rink was opened on Labor Day of that year. In 1910 Mr. Thurston entered the photoplay field. He closed the rink in June, and during the summer months the building was remodeled, the Temple being opened in the fall as a picture house. In the twelve and one-half years of its existence about 3,500,000 persons have passed through its doors. Several years ago Mr. Thurston disposed of the Palace Theatre, on Main street, which was his first show house. Later he constructed the Auditorium for the Federation of Churches at the time they brought Evangelist Biederwolf to Lockport. Mr. Thurston plans to take personal charge of his oil interests near Geneva, Ind., where, it is stated, new wells will be started next week.

The will of the late Patrick Kelley, part owner of the Hi-Art Theatre, in Lockport, N. Y., has been filed for probate. The document shows Kelly's estate to be valued at upwards of $5,000 and is said to be of considerable size. Two brothers are named in the petition—Thomas, of Briarfield, Ireland, and James, whose whereabouts are unknown. The will leaves everything to the first named brother. The executor is directed to continue the business of the deceased until such time as it may in his discretion appear to the best interest of the estate to dispose of it.

On May 1 Nikitas Dipson will close the Family Theatre in Batavia, take out the interior, remodel it and rebuild the entire structure, so that in the fall the Family will appear as a 1,200-seat house instead of a 600-seat, as at present. It is also reported that Mr. Dipson will open a theatre in LeRoy, N. Y., in about six weeks, converting a house for picture purposes.

Frank Aprile will reopen his remodeled and redecorated house, the New Rex, in Geneseo, N. Y., on May 1, offering an orchestra as an added attraction.

Al Wilcox, former manager of the Pictureland Theatre in Cohocton, N. Y., and well known in the theatre business, has given up the state of single bliss to join the ranks of those happily married. A Rochester school teacher is the lucky bride.

Buffalo had two Wild Animal pictures for the entertainment of the public this week. The Olympic originally announced that it would present the Snow version of jungle life the week of April 22, but suddenly moved it up a week, when the Criterion put over a fast one and set in the Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson-Metro version for the week of April 15. The Johnson pictures also opened at the Strand, in Schenectady, last Sunday. Morris Fitzer, of the Empire, Syracuse, was in Buffela last week and viewed the Johnson pictures with Walter Hays, of the Strand interests, now operating the Criterion.

"Specially reinforced seats with straps for hysterical patrons. Doctor in attendance at all shows!" Thus read a "Manager's Note" in the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, on the occasion of Harold Lloyd's appearance in "Safety Last." Some more of Herman Lorence's stuff.

An architect's drawing showing the interior of the new Lock City Theatre has been placed in the window of the telegraph office in Lockport, N. Y. This house, which will be built by Associated Theatres, Inc., of which Harold Dygert is president, will get under way at once. It is located at East avenue and Elm street. The auditorium will seat 1,800 and cost $150,000. The house will open in the fall.

Sid Allen sure is giving them the big ones down in Medina, N. Y. "The Flirt," "Oliver Twist" and "The Pilgrim" all the same week is going some, eh, what?

Miller Stanton is remodeling the Pictureland Theatre in Cohocton, N. Y. The Atlanta Theatre, in Atlanta, N. Y., is being dismantled. C. S. White is going to build a new theatre in Watkins, N. Y. Mr. White now controls the Glen Theatre in that town. N. L. Cole has the contract for the new Memorial Community House to be erected in Holley, N. Y.

James Cardin's new theatre at 3167 Bailey avenue, Buffalo, now in course of construction, is going to set Jim back some 50,000 iron men. We never knew Jim was in Rockefeller's class.

Howard Waugh put over a great double-page tie-up ad in the Jamestown Evening Journal last week on "Adam's Rib," which was shown at the new Palace. Free tickets were offered readers who could find the misspelled words in the various ads on the two pages.

Elmer Dodds, who formerly managed the Buffalo Educational Exchange, is now general manager of the Associated Theatres, Inc., interests in Corning, N. Y., where the company controls the State, Liberty, Princess and Regent.

When Lionel Edel presented "Trailing African Wild Animals" at the Criterion he arranged a special screening for the Boy Scouts in co-operation with the Buffalo Enquirer, and also had the announcement of the showing broadcasted through Western New York. The radio invited all the scouts to come to the Criterion.

Voicing a Plea

L. D. Brown, 680 Broadway, Albany, N. Y., writes us the following in reference to his heavy loss in a fire and the tragic death of his three-year-old daughter:

"I must raise $40 some way for a lot and burial for my daughter, as her body will be taken out of the vault by the middle of next month, and I want a place to lay her remains to rest. I hope you can do something through your paper for an old showman."

Deitrich Sails for Europe

Theodore C. Deitrich, accompanied by Mrs. Deitrich, will sail next Monday (April 23) for Europe on the steamship "Bremen." They will visit Germany, Austria, Italy, Norway, Sweden, France and England, in all of which countries Mr. Deitrich will investigate existing conditions in the motion picture industry. They expect to be gone about three months.

Patronage Battle Raging

In Schenectady, N. Y., where some of the managers of the picture theatres are not on speaking terms, the biggest kind of a fight for patronage is being staged this week between William Shirley, manager of the Strand, and Edwin O. Weinberg, of the New State. It all came about through the State booking "Hunting Big Game in Africa," while the Strand booked Martin Johnson's picture for the same seven days.

No sooner did one manager learn of the other's booking than each started in to plaster the city in a way which has never been seen before. The fight between the two managers reached the newspaper stage with one offering $500 to any one who could prove that the picture which was being shown at his house was not "the only and original," etc.

The Universal company rushed a messenger to Schenectady from New York, bringing extra paper, while an exploitation man was pulled in from Buffalo for the purpose of grabbing any available windows. Mr. Weinberg secured a beat in a private screening to which he invited all of the big game hunters of the city, and it so happens that there are a number of these among the officials of the General Electric Company.

Fire Helps Exploitation of "The Third Alarm" in Boston

Realistic exploitation for "The Third Alarm" was accorded the Gem Theatre at Leominster when a fire which broke out in a Chinese restaurant in the building next door spread to the theatre. It was a coincidence that was rendered all the more striking from the fact that the theatre was placarded with posters depicting apparatus responding to an alarm, and the entire fire-fighting apparatus of the city was called to the scene by the magnitude of the blaze and its threatening aspects.

While the estimated total damage caused by the fire was placed at $50,000, the loss sustained by the Gem Theatre was merely a water loss and of no considerable moment. Fortunately there was no audience in the theatre at the time, although a few moments later the matinee would have been in progress.

The Quincy Theatre and the Alhambra Theatre, both at Quincy, were marks for the lightning in the first electrical storm of the season. Bolts hit the electric wires entering the theatres and caused considerable excitement among the women patrons of the houses when sparks and blue flame were seen in the theatres. No one was hurt and the damage was slight.

The new Coster Theatre at Webster, said to be one of the most modern and up-to-date in Worcester County, has been opened to the public. It is named after George R. Coster, president of the Steinberg Amusement Company and one of the largest of the stockholders. The theatre seats more than 1,100 and was taxed to the utmost. The film was "When Knighthood Was in Flower." The theatre will run matinee and night, both Saturdays and Sundays. It will be used ordinarily as an overflow house for the Steinberg Theatre, and its erection will allow the old house to show road plays on occasions. Only pictures will be shown at the new theatre.

Plans have been drawn and contracts are soon to be let for a new theatre, store and office building at Clinton, to take the place of the old theatre destroyed when the Doggett Block was burned. The plans call for a modern structure of about nine stories. The cost will be several hundred thousands of dollars. The theatre itself will be a most modern, up-to-date playhouse, modernly equipped in every way.

With the opening of Locatelli's Ball Square Theatre at Somerville, that Boston suburb now can boost of one of the handsomest picture houses within the limits of Greater Boston. The new structure is near the boundary line of Medford, and that city also shared in the pleasures incident to opening night. State and city officials, including Mayor Coolidge of Medford and Mayor Webster of Somerville and others prominent in political, social and financial circles, were among the opening night guests.

The new theatre is of modern fireproof construction and is of Italian Renaissance architecture, handsomely embellished and appointed throughout. It seats approximately 1,500. A large and costly organ is one of its features. Mr. Locatelli is also the proprietor of the Central Theatre at Somerville.

Summer residents of Cape Cod, as well as the all-the-year variety, will soon have a modern picture theatre that will seat 1,000 people. It will be located at the corner of Main and Sea streets, Hyannis, one of the most delightful vacation resorts on Cape Cod. The building is to be of English type of stucco and half timber. The interior will be finished to show the wood and will be stained. There will be two summer stores in front, and on the second floor space will be provided for tea rooms and studios. The theatre has been designed and equipped with dressing rooms so as to be available for the staging of local theatricals. George R. Moore of Miami and Hyannis will be manager.

The contract has been awarded for the erection of a brick business block in Clinton, Mass., next to which will be the entrance to a theatre which will be built in the rear of the same lot. The owners of the property and those who will build the theatre and block are Philip J., John and Owen Philburr, brothers. More than $275,000 is involved.

"Russia Through the Shadows," showing of which was banned in Springfield, Mass., by Mayor Leonard, received the same treatment when announcement was made that it would be shown in West Springfield. The ruling was made by the board of selectmen of the town.

Irving MacDonald, manager of Fox's Theatre, Springfield, Mass., certainly does put over some mighty effective lobby displays and he doesn't hide them in the inside lobby, either. They are set right in the full view of passersby. For "Down to the Sea in Ships" a replica of the display used at the Cameo Theatre in New York, a figure of a man about to cast a harpoon, compelled extraordinary attention. For "Shirley of the Circus" patrons were obliged to pass through a typical circus front in order to get to the box office. It was a great ballyhoo, with sawdust, balloons and all the "fixin's" to aid the atmosphere. Ye scribe is going to try and reveal a bit of Manager MacDonald's "life outside the theatre" in a subsequent issue of the World if he can make him talk about it. We'll try to get his picture, too.

New England Wages Leap

Owners of picture theatres throughout New England undoubtedly will feel the effect in their box offices of the wage advances granted this month to more than 250,000 operatives of woollen and cotton mills. The increase in pay amounts to 12½ per cent in most instances.

The average New England mill employe has been receiving $20 a week in his pay envelope. The new wage scale brings the amount up to $22.50. On the basis of 250,000 workers the total weekly payroll in New England will be increased by $625,000. On an annual basis the amount will be $32,500,000.

Because of a 20 per cent increase in the purchasing power of the dollar as compared with June 1, 1920, when textile wages were at their peak, or 16 per cent above the new rate, the mill operative on the new wage scale will be receiving, translated in terms of what his money will buy, the highest rate in history. The Boston News Bureau, financial publication, supplies the foregoing information.

The first annual theatrical ball, under auspices of the stage employes and projectionists of Pittsfield, Mass., April 11, in Masonic Hall, was a fine success. Credit belongs to Chairman Benjamin Johnson, Treasurer Louis Bissell, George L. Brown, John Reid, George A. Bissell, Arthur Elliott, Thomas H. Brown and Joseph J. Drennan.

Manager Gordon Wrighter of Poli's Palace Theatre in Springfield, Mass., believes he had a "winner" bill in every respect on April 12, 13 and 14. The feature picture was "Bella Donna" and the vaudeville headliner was Louise Lovely in her film studio act.

"The Third Alarm" is providing a "free show" for New England firemen. Members of the fire department in Lynn, Mass., were the guests of Manager Al Newhall of the Strand Theatre at a special morning presentation on April 14.

With Martin Johnson's "African Wild Animal Hunt" at the Park Theatre for a second week, with "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera" opening an engagement at the Tremont Temple and Paul J. Rainey's newest hunt pictures at the Modern and Beacon, Boston has seen so many animals the past week that circuses planning to make The Hub during the coming season might just as well leave their menageries at home. The pictures have been shown to admiring thousands and have caused much comment.

A wrecking company is clearing the site on Tremont street, Boston, where Olympic Theatres, Inc., is planning to erect one of the finest theatre buildings in the world, seating 4,500. This site, which contains about one acre of land, is bounded by Tremont, Hollis, Dillaway and Dore streets, and eighteen buildings will have to be razed before the foundations for the new structure can be laid.

The proprietors of the Rialto Theatre at Leominster are up in arms because the city council has turned down their petition to build a cement sidewalk around their new theatre, after the Public Service Committee had said that a tar sidewalk was good enough. The theatre is in the most costly building in the city and has made the corner of Merriam and Main streets the busiest in the city.

A Medford syndicate last week purchased from William L. Wood his realty holdings on Railroad avenue and Pleasant street, Beverly, which includes the Dreamland Theatre Building, which Mr. Wood recently had remodeled.

Abraham Goodside's present to his patrons of the Capitol Theatre, in Springfield, Mass., during third anniversary week, April 16, was the appearance of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Modern Marriage," in which they personally appear upon the stage in a scene from the picture.

A Medford, Mass., syndicate has acquired of William L. Wood his properties in Beverly, Mass., including the Dreamland Theatre, which recently was remodeled by Mr. Wood. He probably will retire from active business.

Maine

They do say that "Bella Donna" did a real big business in Portland and ye scribe heard the same about "Adam's Rib" in Lewiston.

Picture theatres, schools and churches in the town of Sebago Lake have been closed because of an epidemic of smallpox. Many families are under quarantine.

Connecticut

After the Connecticut House of Representatives had passed the bill allowing minors to attend picture shows with adult persons, it was rejected by the Senate. The House, however, recommended the measure to the Committee on the Judiciary on April 12.

A style show featured the evening performances at the Strand Theatre in Waterbury, Conn., during the week of April 9. "Bella Donna" was the accompanying feature.

Mrs. Sylvester Z. Poli, wife of the New England theatre owner, took Governor Templeton to the State Prison in Hartford, Conn., the afternoon of April 10, where His Excellency listened to an urgent plea from Mrs. Poli for a pardon for Angelo Lanzillo, under sentence of fifteen years. The man was convicted seven years ago for complicity in a murder in New Haven, which resulted in the putting to death of three others. Lanzillo, then 18 years old, firmly maintained that he was innocent. Mrs. Poli has informed Governor Templeton that she has in her possession a confession of the three men who were hanged, in which they stated that Lanzillo had no part in the deed.

In the Superior Court in Hartford, Conn., April 13 two matters involving the Grand Theatre, Hartford, formerly conducted by Max Spiegel, were heard by Judge Marvin. One was the application of Abraham D. and I. E. Goldberg of Hartford to have a default judgment obtained against them by Ernest W. Michelfelder of New York for $10,000 reopened. Michelfelder claimed that the defendants had conspired to defraud him by inducing him to invest $3,500 in a lease of the Grand Theatre, representing that they controlled the equipment and furniture. The default was opened.

The Goldbergs, owners of the theatre property, entered an application to have the lease on the property given to Spiegel in 1914 declared void. It was claimed that the rent had not been paid since last December and that the lease has been broken. The theatre is vacant and the Goldbergs desire to have the title cleared so that they can rent it again. Judge Marvin reserved decision.

Announcement was made April 16 that the Grand Theatre, Hartford, will be reopened April 21, presenting feature pictures. Philip Smith, owner of the National Theatre, Boston, and interested in other theatres in Massachusetts, has obtained a five years' lease of the Grand, with the privilege of renewal.

Ray S. Averill, general manager of the theatres conducted by Mr. Smith, supervised the installation of new projection equipment and a new screen. A continuous show will be presented week days from 10:30 a. m. to 10:30 p. m., the program being changed Monday, Wednesday and Friday. A bill also will be presented Sunday nights.

Mr. Averill, who will take charge of the theatre at its opening, is endeavoring to organize an orchestra of women musicians.

A picture theatre will be erected this summer at Ocean Beach at New London, Conn.

The Usa Theatre Company of Stamford, Conn., has filed a certificate of incorporation. The officers are: President, Albert Strauss, New York; vice-president, Ben Leo, New York; treasurer, Jack E. Ungerfield, New York; secretary, Samuel Weinberg, Portchester, N. Y.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad will adjust train schedules at 2 a. m. Sunday, April 29, to conform to daylight saving time in New York and Massachusetts.

Howard-Wells Plan Reduction of Wilmington Theatre Seats

One of the most important realty deals affecting theatrical property to be negotiated in some time in North Carolina was that completed during the past week by which Percy W. Wells and James Howard, of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, purchased the Grand and Victoria theatre buildings and equipment from J. M. Solky, for a consideration in the neighborhood of $175,000. The two theatres have been operated by the Howard-Wells interests for the past several years under a long time lease, they already owning the Royal and Bijou theatres in Wilmington.

Immediately upon completion of the deal it was announced that the Grand Theatre, formerly playing high class features, will be closed and remodeled into a store building. The effort is to reduce the seating capacity of the town, which has been too large to make all of the theatres profitable.

The annual convention of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. will be held at Wrightsville Beach, June 28, 29 and 30, according to official call sent out by Secretary Henry B. Varner. Convention headquarters will be the Oceanic Hotel, this resort's largest hostelry. Will H. Hays has been invited to attend and speak, and, it is believed, will accept the invitation. The program is being arranged by Secretary Varner and President Percy W. Wells.

It was heard with interest throughout the Carolinas that H. H. Anderson, of Charlotte, who formerly operated a chain of theatres, has again entered the theatrical business, having purchased an interest in the Strand, Charlotte, operating as a combination vaudeville and picture house, Laurence Lester, of Columbia, S. C., having leased it from Universal.

The Riggan Opera House, Henderson, N. C., suffered a fire loss of $15,000 last week, great damage resulting from water. The loss is entirely covered by insurance.

S. S. Stevenson, of the Princess, Henderson, N. C., has recently embarked in the garage business in his home town as a "side line" to his theatre and book store.

C. L. Watters, a "graduate" from the Howard-Wells "school" of theatre managers, is meeting with unqualified success in the management of the Opera House, Goldsboro, N. C., which has been going strong since opening the first of the year.

A discarded church in Wallace, N. C., is the building being used for the town's first theatre, the Wanoca, operated by J. A. Rowan and associates.

A woman exhibitor, Mrs. Phelps Sasseen, in the small town of Easley, S. C., recently put over a whirlwind advance advertising campaign and special lobby for "The World's a Stage." Mrs. Sasseen runs the theatre while her husband packs a portfolio for the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Louisville

Miss Frances Hammond, 23 years old, of Chicago, and Henry R. Strube, 29 years old, of Louisville, have married. Mrs. Strube is the daughter of Harry Hammond, manager of the Grand Theatre in Chicago, who is also in the theatrical business in Huntsville, Ala. Mr. Strube is the son of Henry B. Strube, 1442 Christy avenue, Louisville, president of the East End Amusement Company, 736 East Market street. He is secretary of the company and is manager of the Sun Theatre, at Eighteenth and Gallagher streets. He also is connected with the Shelby Theatre, at Shelby and Oak streets.

The Southeast

The Atlanta Theatre, Atlanta's legitimate road-show house, has just completed a spectacularly successful three weeks' run of "Robin Hood" and indications point to the use of this house in the "closed season" as a regulation picture theatre, it having been announced that "One Exciting Night" and a revival of "The Birth of a Nation" will be put on there.

M. E. Forsyth, who has operated the Strand Theatre, Union Springs, Fla., for several years, has been appointed postmaster of his town and his wife and daughter will hereafter conduct the theatre.

The following Southeastern theatre owners were in Atlanta during the past week: Ben Title, the New Gem, Jacksonville, Fla.; R. P. Higgenbothem, Pastime, Leeds, Ala.; Will B. Woods, Gadsden, Ala.; Jasper and Doris Johnson, Parish, Ala.; George L. Denton, Amusu, Lenoir City, Tenn.; Harry Sample, Fort Pierce, Fla.; Saul Harris, Capital Theatre, Little Rock, Ark.; Miss M. Luckel, Bijou, Mobile, Ala.; John Snider, Bessemer City, Ala.; C. D. McConnell, Grand Theatre, Prattville, Ala.; O. T. Chaffin, Cummunity Theatre, Avondale, Ala.; T. H. Wingfield, Monroe, Ga.

G. M. Phillips, formerly manager of the Strand, Atlanta, has been appointed manager of the Vaudette, succeeding H. M. Phillips.

E. J. Sparks, en route from New York to Florida, where he operates theatres in Lakeland, St. Augustine and Orlando, spent several days in Atlanta the past week.

George E. McDermotte has assumed charge of the Southern Enterprises theatres in Macon, Ga., succeeding J. H. Stellings, who resigned to go into another line of business.

Joe Steed will open his new theatre in North Birmingham, Ala., early in June.

Baltimore

The Ruby Theatre, 1225 Washington Boulevard, which was built in 1912 and seats 298, was sold by auctioneers the other day for $8,000. The playhouse has an annual ground rent on it of $84 and the new owner is Joseph Skruck. This house was originally known as the Bunny and Mr. Skruck is the third man to take charge of it since March, 1922.

Quite a change is being made in the Bridge Theatre, Edmonson avenue at Pulaski street, by Louis Schlichter, manager. New chairs are being installed and the whole place is being redecorated and improved.

Through the co-operation of Howard Jefferson, manager of the Parkway Theatre, North avenue at Charles street, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals held the observation for Humane Sunday at that playhouse on April 15.

Philadelphia's Get-together to Be Planned This Week End

Final plans for the great get-together sociable and public recognition through invitation to be held in the largest hotel in Atlantic City and during the heighth of the social season there, under the joint auspices of exhibitors and of exchange men, will be determined on at the meeting on Saturday night of this week in the Hotel Vendig, Philadelphia, of the Moving Picture Theatre Owners' Association covering Pennsylvania and adjoining states.

Inclement weather and the unavoidable absence of President H. J. Schad caused postponement from Friday of last week. Presence of eighty members of the industry is assured. The association will be in conference with the exhibitors who equally with it are working for the success of a public social function which confidently is believed to point out attainment of a higher plane of recognition for the industry than ever before was given.

But this will be not the only matter of interest transacted. There are to be elected thirty-six delegates to the national convention and of course those in the association will pow-wow in order to crystallize sentiment on a favorite son of the Keystone Association for the national presidency. This will be done through ballot. Some action also will be taken on the Daylight Saving subject which, though legislated upon by one branch of the legislature through passage of the Derrick bill prohibiting an artificial time standard, still is pending before the other.

Hunts, Inc., 1324 Vine street, has added another link to its chain of theatres through the purchase this week of the Victory Theatre at Fourth and DuPont streets, Wilmington, Del. It was taken over from Tony Corleto. It seats 900. There are now twenty theatres in the Hunt string. One of the most elaborate of the Hunt amusement enterprises is that of the building of a pier on the Boardwalk at Cape May opposite the Hotel Lafayette. It will have a boardwalk frontage of 174 feet, will run 800 feet out into the ocean and be conducted in cooperation with the big Hunt movie house completed this week and known as Coxe's Pier and Theatre, seating 1,500.

Complete transformation is to be undertaken shortly by the new proprietor of the Legion Theatre, Max Sheinfield, who took title from R. W. Chapman. The original property located at 1616-1618 Orthodox street will not only be renovated and modernized, but by the taking in of a rear lot and consequent extension, will have a seating capacity of 1,000 as against but half that number in the old building.

E. J. Coyle, who has been associated with Becker Brothers for several years as manager, has accepted a position as manager of the Empire Theatre in the Frankford district at 4612 Frankford avenue. This building recently was purchased by Greene & Aultman, 620 North Broad street, and an expenditure of upwards of $20,000 on the improvements is to be made. He will take the place of F. B. Hammond, who resigned to go into the automobile business. Mr. Coyle of recent years was connected with the Twentieth Century Film Company.

Plans for the alteration of the Aurora Theatre, 2200 Germantown avenue, which recently was acquired by Michael Lessee, have been completed and work is to be begun shortly with completion date early in summer. The Aurora and the Diamond were the two recent additions to the Lessee houses. There now are four in the chain. Mr. Lessee for many years was in the exchange business. He recently gave up the film business to enter the exhibitor field.

A new theatre for the colored population is to be constructed at 45th and Fairmount avenue on a piece of ground of which S. Borowsky is proprietor. He is planning to construct a house seating 500 to be ready in September. Mr. Borowsky is already proprietor of the Southern and Gladstone theatres and his plans for the new theatre are along the same line as its two predecessors.

C. F. Kline, former owner of the Palace Theatre of Ardmore, just outside of Philadelphia, has acquired the Alma Theatre, Kensington avenue and Ontario street, having leased the property from its former proprietor, Fred Beckhardt.

William Butler, secretary of the M. P. T. O. A. and who is interested in several theatres in Richmond section, though sporting a new Case car, couples with it the announcement that it represents the financial proceedings from other enterprises than the film industry.

A new organ has just been installed in the Alleghany Theatre, 25th and Alleghany avenue.

The Bijou Theatre of Bridgeton, N. J., has been taken over by Louis Linker, who also is proprietor of the Criterion and the Majestic of the New Jersey city and is now the picture magnet of the town, as he is the sole proprietor of all houses. The Bijou seats 400 and under the new management will be run only on Saturdays, its former proprietors, Roray & Brown, having kept it open every day. The monopoly of the Bridgeton houses has been acquired by Mr. Linker during the past two years.

Reports of the illness of Sam Blatz, proprietor of the Owl Theatre, 22nd and South streets, who has been confined to his home with pneumonia for the past three weeks, are that his condition is serious.

Installation of a $16,000 organ in the Fairmount Theatre owned by Ben A. Stiefel progressed during the week. This is the second similar investment made by Mr. Stiefel in the last few weeks and in almost the same neighborhood, the preceding one having been installed in the Poplar Theatre, also owned by him.

Visiting Exchange Row in Philadelphia, Russel H. Lamont made announcement of purchase by the firm in which he is interested, Hilvenger, Bishof & Lamont, whose headquarters are in the Arcadia Building, Trenton, N. J., of the St. Regis Theatre, East State street, near Broad, which seats 1,000. Its front is being reconstructed and the entire interior being remodelled. The firm proposes shortly to construct the Wilbur Theatre in that section of Trenton near East State street and Olden avenue, which bears its name, a modern house with 1,200 capacity on a plot 50 by 107 feet. This will make the twelfth theatre in the chain. The firm also books for Trenton and adjacent towns and conducts the Woodland Amusement Park near which the new Wilbur Theatre will be, operating there also several large concessions.

Just a suggestion of the versatility which Proprietor William B. Sugars, owner of the newly opened Lyric Theatre in Minersville, Pa., possesses, was made evident to the patrons at the premier of this new house last week. Although the demonstration on the new organ was made by Paul Bailey, who presented the ballad music from "Faust" as a special attraction of a high grade musical program, Proprietor Sugars showed that he too could operate the organ, and together with Manager Eddie Phipps invited the audience at the conclusion of the exhibition to gather about the musical instrument and to receive a vivid explanation of its mechanism. The novelty is the talk of the town.

The new Lyric is on the main street of Minersville, an attractive little house for 750, decorated in old gold and ivory, with a screen hidden by ruby red curtains. Mr. Phipps, the new manager, has been identified with the industry through the coal regions of Pennsylvania for fifteen years.

Harry Troxell, manager of the Photoplay Theatre of Gettysburg, Pa., called on Exchange Row in Philadelphia during the week.

Leopold Stokowski and the entire Philadelphia Orchestra will play at the Stanley Theatre on Wednesday evening, April 25, for the night only, as a personal compliment to the Stanley Company of America.

St. Louis

Foiled! Bandits who sought to rob the safe of the Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis, had everything sitting pretty at 4 a. m., on April 9, until Patrolman James Dunn happened along. The thieves had carried the strong box from the front office to the rear of the theatre. The combination had been battered off with a sledgehammer. Then along came Jimmy and bang went their plans. Four suspects found in the vicinity of the Rivoli were arrested.

Whether the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will be forced to seek a new home next season depends upon the success of Henri Chouteau's venture in converting the Odeon Theatre into a movie palace. For many years the Odeon has been the scene of all the St. Louis activities of the Symphony orchestra, while the concerts and recitals of all the big guns of the operatic and concert world, with a few exceptions, have always been staged there. But a few weeks ago Chouteau purchased the house and decided to convert it into a picture theatre. If it proves a winner with the silent drama it cannot be used in the future for concert purposes.

A. Sauter has purchased Mannion's Park and summer theatre, 8614 South Broadway, St. Louis, from James P. Mannion for $50,000. He will continue to operate both the picture show and summer garden, opening the season early in May.

Manager Herchal Stuart of the Missouri Theatre has arranged with the St. Louis-Post-Dispatch to broadcast the music and vocal programs of the Missouri over Radio Station KSD every Saturday night. This station reaches every state in the country, Cuba, Canada, Mexico and ships on both oceans.

A son of Charles Goodnight, De Soto, Mo., exhibitor, underwent an operation in one of the local hospitals on April 12. He is said to be doing nicely.

Exhibitors seen in the local exchanges during the week included: P. E. Lisbe, Opera House, O'Fallon, Mo.; Sam Taylor, O'Fallon, Ill.; G. M. Luttrell, Majestic Theatre, Jacksonville, Ill.; C. W. McCutcheon, who operates houses in Sikeston and Charleston, Mo.; Paul Moran, who is the new owner of A. C. Norwein's Theatre at Bonne Terre, Mo.; O. H. Giese of the Oh Gee Theatre, Edwardsville, Ill.; C. E. Brady, Broadway Theatre, Cape Girardeau, Mo., and Jim Reilly of Alton, Ill.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

Memphis Theatre Makes New Baby Show Hook to Newspaper and Local Merchant

EVEN at this late day there can be found new angles to the time-tried Baby Show. They are getting more intrequent, but now and then a new idea does spring up, and H. B. Clarke, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., is the latest to give the old frame a new coat of paint.

He tied into silhouettes.

He also tied in a department store and the News-Scimitar.

The idea was that the department store wanted some publicity for its juvenile department and was willing to pay for it. The paper was willing to try anything that would have a tonic effect on circulation.

The store donated five chip diamond rings, five plain gold bands and a loving cup. It also hired a silhouette cutter. Naturally it also increased its newspaper advertising to hook in.

All Set

That's the plot of the story. Here's how it worked. The News-Scimitar came out with a spread that it wanted to know the most popular kiddies in town.

To further that end it had arranged with the store to give space in its children's department to the silhouette artist. He would cut a black and white picture of any child under six, who was brought to the store between 10 and 1 and 2 and 5 each day.

The silhouette would be given the child and would serve as identification at the Majestic Theatre, where each afternoon at 3 o'clock children of a certain age would be judged by the applause they received.

At the Monday matinee the children between one and two years of age were judged. Tuesday was given to those over two and under three, those in their fourth year had Wednesday, the fifth were judged on Thursday and on Friday the children between five and six were presented. A gold ring was given each boy winner and a diamond ring to the girl leaders.

On Saturday the ten winners during the week were again present and the loving cup was awarded, through applause, to the most popular child in the ten.

This gave eight big stories in the newspaper, and eight advertising splashes from the store, in each of which the theatre and its attractions were played up, it brought a lot of matinee business to the theatre, and was a splendid advertisement to the store.

We think that there is one point Mr. Clarke overlooked. Nothing in particular was done with the silhouettes after they were made. They were shown at the theatre door and then taken home for the family archives.

Most silhouette cutters work with a double sheet, cutting two at one time. These could be made of such a size as to go on a lantern slide, one copy being given the child and the other pasted to a glass slide. These could then be shown on the screen just before each child was shown in the spotlight or simultaneously, if desired, and the children later grouped for the showing.

This would build up the importance of the stage presentation, work in an alibi for the silhouettes, and round out the idea generally, the chief idea of the silhouette being to get the children and their parents into the store's department where they can look over the goods while waiting their turn to be sketched with the scissors.

Chaplin Autogobile a Pioneer Novelty

Through the courtesy of J. C. Hewitt, now of the Strand Theatre, Robinson, Ill., we are able to show the baby managers what one of the first street perambulators looked like. This is the Chaplin "autogobile," used in the days when Chaplin was still a rising young Keystone star.

We do not recall who made the device, but after he had gotten his use from it, he offered to ship it to anyone who would pay the freight, and the stunt traveled all over the country east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio.

Hewitt used it at the Orpheum Theatre, Carmel, Ill., and shipped it along to someone else. Just who that was, he does not recall.

As shown in the photograph, the stunt was a decrepit buggy with the horse hitched to the rear. The "radiator" was a berry crate with an old fire extinguisher on top and with tin pan headlights. It was provided with a steering wheel and a license plate of the previous year.

The front card reads: "We can't afford a Ford, but we can laugh heartily for 10 cents" and on the horse is a banner "Don't smile at me. Visit the Orpheum and have a real laugh."

The top banner reads: "Keystone Chaplin at the Orpheum, Gardner, Mass.," which is where Hewitt took the machine from.

It is not much of a stunt these days of automobile parades, but it was a wonder eight or ten years ago.

Printed Own Sheet for Jackie Serial

Because the daily papers politely declined to print any more serialized picture stories for the time being, R. J. McLean, of the Palace Theatre, Washington Court House, Ohio, was stuck with the First National's improved version of Oliver Twist in six parts.

McLean figured that the publication would be of real assistance in selling the picture, so he got out a house organ and ran it with such success that he had to reprint the first and second issues to catch up with the demand.

In a small town you can get enough merchant advertising to more than pay the cost of printing and you can make it carry your general house advertising as well. You have something to sell the merchants when you print a serialization that makes a better argument than the usual house program.

Use that to start off with and you can probably continue publication at a profit after the serial runs out.

Don't say you can't get the advertising. Others do.

This Is Newer for an Identification

Instead of asking readers to supply a fourth line in a quatrain contest on Omar the Tentmaker, Keith's National Theatre, Louisville, worked more subtly. The Courier-Journal printed the Rubaiyat in six instalments, and each day used a line sketch illustrating one of the quatrains. You had to decide which quatrain fitted the illustration best, which was not as simple as it sounds.

Two thousand replies were received, which indicates a healthy interest in the stunt.

HERE IS THE CHAPLIN AUTOGOBILE, ONE OF THE FIRST

This device was built by some manager whose name we do not recall. When he had gotten his use out of it, he generously turned it over to others. It traveled widely and was last seen in Mt. Carmel, Ill. J. C. Hewitt dug out the photograph

A Stage Wedding Is the Marriage Chance

Reviving the stage wedding idea, Louis Christ, of the Pantages Theatre, Minneapolis, got a big play on The Marriage Chance, and with the help of Jack Auslet, of the American Releasing Corporation's exchange, he made things all jake for the more or less happy bride and groom.

An American Release

HERE COMES THE BRIDE

He made a substantial cash "present" in lieu of a salary, and many merchants were persuaded to make contributions ranging from a sack of flour to pieces of furniture. Of course these presents were given window displays to hook into the advance stories, and formed additional advertising work, a photographer made a flashlight of the ceremony

It is old stuff, but still good, and it brought in more real newspaper work than Christ had hoped for. It was "human interest" and the editors played it up without being urged. Of course the stories had to carry the title, because the title worked so well with the stunt, and in most instances the lead of the story was woven about taking The Marriage Chance.

Not a Castle

E. C. Ogg, of the Imperial Theatre, South Pittsburgh, Tenn., is probably the only manager in the country who did not advertise Knighthood with a castle front.

He used a miniature of a colonial home with a lattice fence almost as tall as the house, with a sky background with the moon and three stars, all nicely set into a shadow box.

It was in no sense characteristic, but it was interesting, so it made business. That's the big idea.

El Paso Lobbies Are Kept Up to Standard

Although J. M. Edgar Hart has been translated from the Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, El Pasans are not going to lose the lobby displays which made so much business for the theatre. W. E. Paschall, the new manager, is following tradition and is giving just as much thought and care to the work, and is achieving splendid results.

His best effort to date is on Adam's Rib, for which he built a miniature of the cave man scenes, with a three-plane forest and cutouts of Milton Sills and Julia Faye, clad in real furs. Sills also carries a real bow. A dim green lighting heightens the effect. Paintings are used on either side. They are rather close to the centrepiece in the photograph, but this is merely to get it all on one plate. In the lobby they are not so close as to interfere.

For Singed Wings the chief display is a box about eighteen inches deep with a landscape backing behind a balustrade and flight of steps. The outline of a butterfly is impressed on the scene through the use of deeper tints, which is something we do not recall having seen before. Curtains frame the picture.

The pendant butterfly above is in prismatic colors with flasher lamps for eyes and at the tips of the two antennae. The flash illuminates the prismatic colorings and greatly heightens the effect.

When Mr. Hart's departure was announced several managers wrote in to express their regret at the loss of the Hart lobbies, but Mr. Paschall is going to carry on and meanwhile Edgar is getting busy over in Fort Worth, so it is a net gain instead of a loss.

English Windows Lack Good Design

This cut of a window display is interesting only because it comes from London, where it was used to advertise The Eternal Flame at the Empire Theatre.

It is a drug store window hooking up to the Dorothy Dainty powder puffs and the press agent utters shrill cries of regret that it was not renamed the Norma Puff.

A First National Release

THE ENGLISH IDEA

The display carries a large portrait, two frames with insert cards and stills and a somewhat crude display of the puffs. The effect is not helped to any great extent by the nitrogen bulb which hangs just above the portrait and which probably half blinded the sidewalk spectator at night. Apparently indirect illumination is something yet to be taken up over there, and window dressing as an art is yet in the formative stage to judge from this display.

Mitchell Is Out

W. Griffith Mitchell, who for the past four years has been connected with the Butterfield Circuit, has severed his connection with that company and is looking around. We hope he sees something pretty soon, for Mitchell is a prolific source of ideas.

LOBBY DISPLAYS STILL HOLD THE EYE AT THE PALACE THEATRE, EL PASO, TEXAS

W. E. Paschall, the new manager, is upholding the traditions established by J. M. Edgar Hart, and is achieving some nice displays. In the forest scene for "Adam's Rib," Milton Sills and Julia Faye are draped in real furs, to protect them from the northers. In "Singed Wings," Bebe Daniels can get chilblains for all Paschall seems to care, though he does throw in a couple of candles to warm her up. The suspended butterfly is electrically lighted.

MORROW MAKES HIS OWN POSTERS FOR THIS LOBBY

Floyd D. Morrow, of the Palace Theatre, Washington, Pa., uses cutouts from the threes and six as matter for his hand-lettered posters. The posters are worked on compo board, used repeatedly

Makes Own Posters from Cutout Paper

Floyd D. Morrow, advertising man for the Palace Theatre, Washington, Pa., finds that it pays him to remake the posters on the house attractions, using as foundations the cutouts from the three and six sheets. All of the wall work in the display shown on this page is hand painted on compo board bases which can be used repeatedly.

Not many managers can follow this idea, since it calls for an artist of more than passing skill, but where it can be done, the individuality of the display is well worth the trouble it costs. It seldom happens that a poster is precisely what a house thinks will sell its clientele best, since they are designed for general use, and to remake them not only fits them for the strongest appeal, but there is a certain air of distinction to the special poster which the full printed sheets necessarily lack.

This is offered more as a curiosity than as a suggestion, but where the suggestion can be followed, it will be found a useful and profitable one.

Drapery Lobby Sold Jazzmania to Limit

Figuring that Jazzmania was different from the usual Mae Murray production and needed some special attention, Ray Beall, of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., evolved a drapery lobby that is about as nice as they come these days.

He made a compoboard front for the box office and the doorways, backed the openings with painted walls from some other display, and draped in the rest of the space with soft material which fell into graceful folds and "took" the blended lights very effectively. Two large vases, one either side of the doorways, supported large fans in their tops, and there are a couple of nondescript ornaments on either side of the box office window.

Down near the curb line were tree branches set in ornamental boxes and draped with tinsel ribbon, which gave a fine effect in the evening and were eye-catching in the daytime, though not to the same degree. The chandelier was also covered with thin material and the ceiling was canopied.

It was all as pretty as a new red wagon, and it sold the patrons the idea they must see this production if they had to hock the clock.

Good Program Ideas from Fred S. Meyer

About the best monthly program to come to this desk is the publication of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, edited by Fred S. Meyer. We gave Bob Welch a copy a couple of months ago and Bob got a page and a half editorial comment out of it.

But you have to catch it every month, because Meyer is always hitting a new gait, which is why he gets out a good issue. For April he announces his intention of running a page short story each issue, and offering $10 for each 400-word story used; which is better pay than the smaller magazines offer.

Then he splits $100 three ways for the most enlightening letter on which of the big features of the month gave the most appeal, and why. The chief idea was to have a contest, but Meyer knows he will get a lot of light on patron tastes.

An entire page is given to an article by a popular clergyman who is leaving the city; an appeal for a greater and better city that makes really interesting reading.

There is a live editorial page with editorials. On another page he announces that you can get the baseball scores by calling up the theatre; there is a chatty and selling comment on the leading features of the month, and a page of general snappy paragraphs.

About two-fifths of the issue is advertising, and this must represent a real profit, for the magazine is good enough to command a fair advertising price because it is read.

Have you a little program in your house?

Are you preparing plans now for your summer exploitation? If not, you better begin, or before you know it summer will be here.

Laundry Slips Are Anti-Chinese Plea

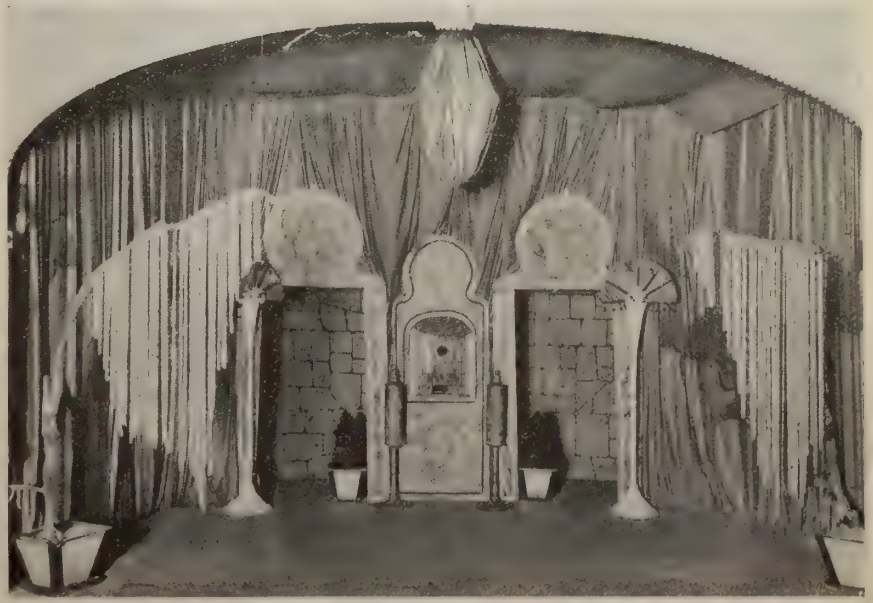
Chinese laundries are not as prevalent as they were at one time, but the idea still prevails and Robert Cleary, of the Majestic Theatre, Kankakee, Ill., used it to land some laundry slips when he played Constance Talmadge.

He supplied a local concern with 5,000 slips carrying a picture of the star in Chinese dress, a block of alleged Chinese ideographs and the doggerel:

West is East
And East is West
For service and economy
Domestic Laundry's Best

Alfred Tennyson never wrote anything like that, but it got the title over and helped to sell the play.

Mr. Cleary also landed the two signed series prepared on this picture on the women's pages of the two dailies.



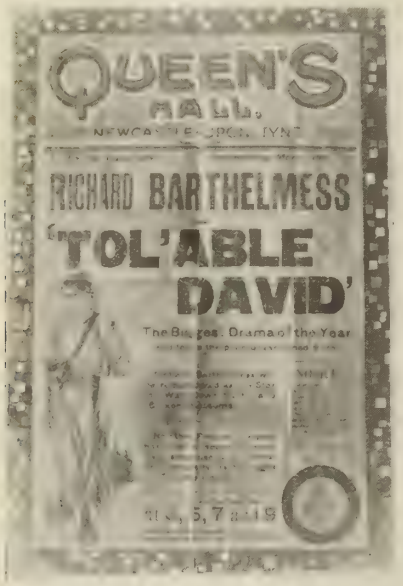
A Metro Release

HERE IS A MIGHTY WELL PLANNED DRAPERY LOBBY

It was done by Ray Beall, of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., for Mae Murray in "Jazzmania," and it sold the Tiffany production. The photograph cannot reproduce the colorings and this was the real feature of the display

English One Sheets Are a Double Print

First National contributes a picture of the one sheets worked by Queen's Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, for Tol'able David. The border is lithographed in red, blue, green and yellow; three printings, with the center left blank. When the attraction is known this is done within the border, again in three printings, this time in red on yellow with a black for the house plate, which carries the name of the manager, as is the English custom.



A First National Release

THIS TOOK SIX PRINTINGS

Probably it is cheaper to do the border in quantities, though we think it should be possible to work the stock border with the color used in the body of the display. It is the same as the ready print program idea.

The special poster is required in England because the sizes there differ from those in use on this side and the stock one sheets as supplied to exhibitors in America will not fit the English boards.

There is also a sample of the advertising display, which is nothing more than the familiar "most honest advertisement," with the affidavit of the manager as to the excellence of the attraction. The only difference is that this display carries the affidavit in imitation typewriter type, which makes it look more convincing.

ADAM'S RIB ROAST SANDWICH DISPLACES THE SUNDAE

George Rea, of the Colonial Theatre, Washington Court House, Ohio, got most of a restaurant window for the picture with a hook in to a renamed staple. When they come this easy there is no sense in saying exploitation is dead

Hogs Big Window for Renamed Eats

Nothing slow about George Rea, of the Colonial Theatre, Washington Court House, Ohio. He got most of the large window in a restaurant through painting a card.

He sold the proprietor on the idea of driving on roast beef sandwiches through calling them Adam's Rib roast sandwiches, and that got him a couple of window cards, a one sheet and a cutout. There was just about room for the sandwich sign, but it got all the more attention through the pictorial display. Such large paper was not regularly used in the window. Passersby stopped to see what it meant, saw the card and were sold on the sandwich idea. It may sound a bit forced to say that this really helped business, but it did—not just Rea's business, but for the restaurant, too.

Before you pull your eye somewhere else, note the paster on the cutout; a stock item. In case you cannot read it in the reproduction it follows the house name with "Selected photoplays. Always glad to see you."

THIS LOBBY WAS BUILT FROM WHITE FLOWER PAPER

Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, appreciated the Paramount paper and made his entire display with the material he obtained from the exchange, and he took in considerably more than the usual receipts

Flowered Front Sold Old Story

Because the front of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, is in Colonial deisgn, Albert Hill had only to put on a flowered trellis for Thorns and Orange Blossoms. He used real flowers, figuring that while they would not last out the engagement, it would help if the play was given the proper start. The flowers were dogwood and real orange blossoms.

In advance of the run he distributed about 300 books to the women patrons and one thousand samples of a new face powder, the perfume of which was supposed to suggest orange blossoms.

With several strong pictures at the other houses, he found it was possible to get the crowds to follow the old-time title.

THREE CHEERS FOR THE GOOD OLD RED, WHITE AND BLUE

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., figured that the tricolor was the best display for "My American Wife," so he put Gloria on a shield and ran streamers of crepe paper over to the borders of the frame. Noisy? Yes. Good? You bet.

Hooked a Bank

Being always willing to take extra advertising if he does not have to pay for it, Herschel Stuart sold a bank on Mr. Billings Spends His Dime. He sent his press agent over to the National Bank of Commerce with a cut and an idea. The bank took both.

It put the cut into a display which started, 'Mr. Billings saysy 'I bought romance with my dime, but it's safer to put your dimes to work.'

"Mr. Billings Spends His Dime is the name of a five-reel motion picture. There may be thrills in the way of a spendthrift, even at ten cents a throw, but no lasting benefits are procurable with the dimes you have already spent.

The moral, of course, is that you turn them over to the bank and watch them grow.

That's the plot of the story. See if you can write the second chapter.

Peggy Impersonators Beat Child Chaplins

Not since the idea of the child Chaplin impersonator idea was new—and that is some years ago, has an impersonation contest brought such results as enabled H. E. Ellison, of the Princess Theatre, Denver, to make a two-reel Century Comedy, The Kid Reporter, a greater attraction than the longer feature.

With the aid of Al G. Birch, his publicity man, and T. B. McCormick, Universalist, he planned a prize contest for the best impersonation of Baby Peggy, the tiny star of the comedy.

Instead of just announcing the affair, the trio worked it into a stunt which brought a parade requiring two hours and twenty minutes to pass the judges' stand, and had the crowds lined up on the sidewalk for several hours in pretty mean weather.

Impersonation Not Limited

The impersonation was not limited to Peggy in The Kid Reporter, but to any character in her numerous plays, which gave a greater variety to the turnout as the picture of the prize winners will show. This gave it a decided advantage over the Chaplin or the Coogan idea, where the costumes are all more or less along the same lines. The little Universal star has been seen in such a variety of roles that there was all sorts of chance for dressing up, and the parade was of real interest.

Not only did the theatre offer a set of prizes totaling $150, but each child was given a box of candy by a leading confectioner, and a children's store, with a haircutting annex, offered to give any contestant a Baby Peggy haircut free during certain hours, and some 300 children showed up at these times, affording a special ballyhoo for several days running. It was good advertising for the haircutting department and even better for the theatre.

This stunt could have been slapped on and have given good results, but a little more care in putting it over made it a real sensation; as important as an official municipal event, and took it completely out of the ballyhoo class.

If you try the stunt, you can perhaps hook a photographer to the idea of giving each prize winner a picture of herself—enabling him to sell the doting parents a dozen or so at his regular prices. It will help swell the offer at no additional cost.

Three Sheet Cutouts Top the Still Frames

Cutouts from the three sheets of The White Flower gave C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., something different for his still frames. The idea seems to be new, and it is to be commended where the picture will build up on the title.

He made several of these for his lobby, with a banner showing her as the native dancer above the entrance, and he used the surf board as the dancer.

There was a revival on during the engagement, and revivals are plain poison to the theatres in the South, but Mr. Irvin did the best week's business he has had in some time with this picture.

A TWO PLANE POSTER

The advantage of such a display over a straight poster is the attraction value. Posters are common, but a two piece display makes a "production" out of the poster and gets many times the notice a poster would attract.

Painted Display Is Good Window Seller

With some sections of the country making the hypercritical objection that Chaplin ridicules the clergy in The Pilgrim, H. B. Clarke of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, reports that he broke all records for the past two years with this same wayfarer.

Two weeks before the opening he put a banner into a store window, completely filling the glass. The series of silhouette sketches were odd; they told the main story and they manufactured interest. When the playing time came he dressed his lobby with cutouts, put up two banners, made cutouts of the convict and the clergyman from the 24-sheet, and before showing time he took the frames inside so they would not get trampled upon. He needed all of his lobby space to handle the business he drew with the comedy.

Instead of the usual drama feature to go with the comedy, he put in another comedy, keeping the show short and giving better satisfaction.

This is an error he avoided, but which many managers have made. They seem to think that they must have a five-reel drama, no matter what the feature is, so they load the bill with a drama—and very often a cheap one, getting a badly proportioned bill which runs too long for real profit.

If people come to see Chaplin, they do not ask for more. Give short shows and more of them. You'll make more money and give better satisfaction. That's what Mr. Clarke did.

Exploitation First

Jack Hellman dropped into Bimidji, Minn., just to see if there really was a town of that name and to ask Mrs. A. E. Brinkman, of the Elko Theatre, if there was any Paramounteering he could do for her.

She told him the Paramounts were selling themselves nicely, thanks, but if he could show her how to raise from 30 cents to a dollar top on Robin Hood, she surely would be obliged.

Jack cut loose a string of adjectives long enough to impress the natives when they were all assembled in one newspaper space (the adjectives, not the natives, of course), and he wrote a speech for Mrs. Brinkman to use in selling the story to the convention of the State Education Association and then he went back to his regular job feeling that he had helped Paramount through helping to sell the United Artist's release.

That's one of the little reasons Claud Saunders does not have to cut down his exploitation staff.

Circulated

Here's a new one. Paramount put out a leather bound book on the Thirty-nine. Ted Bryant of the Gem Theatre, Oelwein, Ill. gave his copy to the public library.

The records show that it was taken out 38 times in two months, but the records do not show how many persons took it out through a mistaken idea as to what it was. Anyhow it spread the gospel for the Gem because Bryant booked them all.

Dated the Dames With Adam's Rib

At last J. M. Edgar Hart has got his feet under him in Fort Worth, and he is commencing again. He has sort of been looking over the ground in his new job as Manager of Theatres for Southern Enterprises in the Texas town, and it was not until Adam's Rib came along that he perked up and took notice.

He sent this letter to a selected list of women. It is a little diffuse, and perhaps you can shorten it somewhat, but the idea is here, and if you can't cut you can use it entire:

My dear Eligible:

The rain is playing tattoo upon the window panes, as I sit writing. I look about a room of luxurious comfort, a cozy hearth, a warm fire in the grate, a shaded lamp and an inviting morris chair. It is Home, cheerful and "comfy," a place intended for Two.

I am wondering just now, why it is that I happen to be alone and that we "two" have never met? I feel as if I had a "bone" to pick with Fate. I know who and what you are; I realize what you would mean as the "other" unit of "Two"—and yet, so far, our paths have not blended in acquaintanceship. Neither's the fault, but is is not true that Adam's Rib is responsible for Eve's Bite, or the "apple" bite the direct sequence of the "Rib?"

Be that as it may, God said it "Was not Good for either Man or Woman to live Alone"—something to that effect. I am going to enclose a tiny wee bit of that Father Adam's Rib. It came to me in duplex, advertising that wonder Paramount Picture creator Cecil B. De Mille's "Adam's Rib" and it has furnished me an idea, which, possibly, may assist us to recognize each other. This extraordinary production will show at the Palace Theatre during Easter Week, beginning Sunday. I am assuming that you will attend, but unaware of which day, I am going to ascertain this in a way that is a secret to you. If you will pull out this tiny wee little bit of Adam's Rib and hold the tiny wee bit of bone in your hand and look about, you will easily see me doing the same thing. It will assuredly enable you to identify me with this letter, which after all is but a very nice plan of strategy, executed for the purpose of eventually meeting you—oh, ever so properly.

Don't forget to go to the Palace this coming week.

Yours mystifyingly,

B. SURE N. KUM.

Now here is where Edgar shows his cleverness. He knew that if he put a sliver of bone into the envelope, the effect would be repellant. But a bit of bone was essential. He solved the problem by getting cuttle fish bones, such as are sold for use in bird cages, and broke these into fragments, which were enclosed in a white prescription envelope and sent along with the letter. It was clean, and yet it was bone, but if Adam had ribs like that, we'll bet he spent half his time in the hospital.

Real Small Town Man Displays City Spirit

Perhaps you can beat this, but we think that E. J. Milton holds the record. He says his is the smallest town in the United States with a picture theatre. Hazlewood, Ind., has a population of 58 persons, or did on April 3. And Mr. Milton is using big-town stuff.

He had Harold Lloyd in Grandma's Boy the other day and wanted to tell the other 57 varieties about it, so he got out a novelty in the form of a manila envelope and printed up:

FREE SAMPLE
ROACH'S LONG-LIFE TONIC

A tonic that will bring back color to faded cheeks, remove the wrinkles from the saddened face and make you young again.

Not a patent medicine. Directions enclosed.

The directions were advice to see the picture at the Cozy Theatre, and the "tonic" was a cinnamon bean in heart shape.

This would have been better for Dr. Jack, but Mr. Milton did not want to wait that long, and probably he will have something as good, or better, when he runs that. A man in a small town who has the nerve to play Grandma's Boy this early can think up lots of things. He has to if he wants to keep open. But we presume he draws from the neighboring towns.

This is a good stunt, and better than naming the tonic after Lloyd, which is a give-away before the envelope is opened. Fewer persons know of Hal Roach.

Riding Omar

In Schenectady they gave Omar the Tentmaker a ride around town while he was playing the Strand Theatre there, borrowing a Chevrolet in return for mention on the banner. Omar will hit the Fords yet.

A good follow-up was lost when they failed to get the reporter to ask the Persian what he thought of Schenectady. There was a chance for a really clever story here to hook into the ballyhoo.

Never mind. Keep the idea and use it the first time you have a marked foreign type. In these days of Sheik plays you will not have long to wait.

BIRCH'S PAGODA EFFECT

The front painting alone should have advertised business, but above this was a pagoda effect, backed by strips of colored fabric and topped with a couple of huge parasols. It looks a little flat in the photograph, but in reality it was one of the most colorful displays Denver has used smoked glasses on for a long time. It was so striking that Birch hated to take it down when the run of the play was over. He liked to look at it himself, and we don't blame him.

Sold Cloth and Star With Sample Copies

It had to come. Tut is too much of a temptation, and Lewis Garvey, publicity man for Poli's Bijou Theatre, New Haven, and Russell Moon, Paramounteer, hooked a department store to the Bijou attraction through samples of a new Egyptian fabric, a small square of which was attached to 5,000 cards.

SELLING BY SAMPLE

Mendel's had just completed a fashion show tie-up on My American Wife which had persuaded the store manager that there was money in the movies for him, and he very willingly donated the cloth necessary for 5,000 samples. They could have had enough for 10,000 for the asking.

And he appreciated the last line on the reverse of the card, which told the reader to look in Mendel's window to see from the photographs how beautiful Pola Negri really is. He knew that would bring women to the store, and no store manager seeks to avoid that happening, so he made a splendid display.

Heads of the star were draped in the Egyptian fabrics to suggest dress effects, and the interspaces were filled with photographs and the Curtis stills.

The sample card should prove a useful addition to store hook-ups.

Brand New Idea on Treasure Hunt

Just when you figure that about all possible angles have been worked on any stunt, along comes someone with a fresh kick.

TWO CAPITAL LOBBIES ON "DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS"; A PICTURE WELL WORTH EXPLOITING

On the left is a coming foyer display from the Hippodrome Theatre, Cleveland, planned by Resident Manager William Raynor. It is a wonderfully pretty display. On the right is the outer lobby of the State Theatre, Pittsburgh; a more conventional treatment, but effective. This Clifton production will well repay any extra exploitation, for it makes good.

Pittsburgh Theatres Return to Type Ads

H. C. Frost sends in some of the displays from the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, and calls attention to the fact that they are all type. He does not quite like them and asks for suggestions. Just as Sam Sivitz had come around to type insertions, he was forced by illness to drop out and Frost, the newcomer, returned to the all-hand-work, achieving the illegible displays for which Pittsburgh has been noted. We said nothing about it because it was too darned discouraging, after all the ink we had used in converting Sivitz, but since Mr. Frost asks for advice, we are picking out the least successful of his experiments for discussion. This space is 95 lines by four; almost seven inches. The others are all in the same form, but most of them have better cuts. We take it that these cuts are mat stuff and not the work of a house artist. Mr. Frost does not say so, but we infer that the absence of the artist is what caused the reversion to type displays. For one thing we believe that the displays are too regular. There is the star above the cut and the title below, the supporting cast, a break for the comedy features, and the comedy titles. It is all too regular and formal. If Pola Negri is played up at the top of the first space, we would put the title of the second play at the top, starting off, perhaps, with "A ripping good drama of the Alabama Mountains, Scars of Jealousy." One of those fine Ince productions. Then the cut and below, "a fine cast of star players headed by ——" and the names as shown. Then some other form should be devised for the third and fourth spaces, and all four should be so arranged that they do not show a line of cuts. In the matter of cuts, most plan books give better material than this if Mr. Frost will realize that sometimes a section of a full page display will give him something better than the one or two column layouts. Often there is some small figure in the larger mat he can cut down with decided profit. These cuts are too small in importance as well as size. They suggest the illustrations in some old chap book. Different type faces should be used for the different titles and we think that if he went across six columns he would get a better display. This does not mean two additional column spaces but a shorter space made wider. This will give the additional advantage of getting out of step with column ads above or below, since a four house ad in six columns will break in the middle of a column, and so get better attention. The chief defects in this display are a poor selection of cuts, and too great a regularity in layout. In some ways we like the special boxes for the comedies, but where space is limited he will do better to cut out the special line and let each comedy trail in its proper space, retaining the title for each, but omitting to tell the self evident fact that it is a comedy and not a news reel. After all that we would try and get the printer to give us a better letter for body type than the Roman. Retaining the cross line and the name plates, an effort should be made to give a different appearance to the rest each week until the combinations are exhausted, forcing a return to the original, and then down the line again. For example, one week the outside cuts can rise to the top with the middle ones at the bottm. The next week the four cuts can be staggered, each a little higher or lower than the adjacent ones, then the first can rise to the top, the second fall to the bottom with the third at the top and the fourth at the bottom. There is ample room for wide variety once the printer can be persuaded to do what he is asked, but we do not envy Mr. Frost his wrestle with the Pittsburgh printers, who seem to be about the poorest lot of type slingers this side of a Chinese office trying to set an American display. We don't want to discourage Mr. Frost, but merely to warn him that he has a fight on his hands which he will win in the long run if he will persevere. He has made one step forward in kicking out the hand lettering. These displayes at least can be read; which is more than could be said for the hand lettered stuff in single column measure, and a twelve em column at that. We shall watch Mr. Frost's struggles with real interest.

JUST ONE COLUMN CUT

this three fives on Fury. There are plenty of cuts and mats to be had from the press book, but Swanke knows that if he gets attention with a one he has the rest of the space for type, and he knows that type will sell well, so he uses type, where some advertisement designers having no more space will crowd a three column cut into the area and have barely enough room left for the house signature and the play title. This space should yield many times the selling value of a large cut and little type. Cut alone seldom sells a story. Its chief function is to get attention for the space through being different from the other displays. Not more than once in a hundred times will a cut alone sell a single ticket. It must be backed up with sales argument. Where there is room for a big cut and plenty of talk, then to use the two and three column sizes is good policy, but where the space is more or less limited, the smallest cut that will get attention is the best as well as the most economical. The three selling boxes below all help, but the three together have not the sales value of the personal guarantee of the manager, L. B. Clark, printed above the dating. There is a good idea shown in the house signature where an eight point "of course" follows the house name. It carries the implication that the Rialto always has the best without arousing antagonistic disbelief in the breast of the man who always challenges any statement. It just slides the idea over nicely.

Reducing the Display Gets Type Too Small

This display from the Victory Theatre, Providence, is a four sevens and is apparently based upon two advertisements from the plan book or some similar source. Evidently the entire display for Mad Love and the panel for Gimme were lifted from some source, pasted up, lettered around and reduced for this space. As a result the selling lines are so small as to require the closest scrutiny to be read. We do not believe that the average newspaper has type faces so small. It is a five on six point, but with a face value of about a four point, and that in the Gimme panel is even smaller. No one goes over the amusement advertising with a magnifying glass, and yet the small type here cannot be read by the average person without a glass. Lifting the plan book designs is a good idea and some fine results can be obtained where it is skillfully done, but where a reduction by half is to be made of matter in eight point or smaller, the space carrying this text should be painted out and marked for a mortise that less matter, but of a readable size, may be inserted. It would have been better had this small stuff merely been routed out on the plate and the selling done on the title. At least they would have had the display value of white space. This would have cost very little and would have shown some result, but the mortise is what really is needed here, with one good strong phrase in place of some selling talk which merely irritates the reader. He will feel that he should read the stuff and finding that he cannot, he will dismiss the titles from his mind and turn to some other house with an appeal which can be read. If you lift illustration, be certain that what you lift will come out all right on the reproduction.

A FOUR COLUMN DISPLAY WITH FOUR HOUSES WHICH LACKS CONTRAST GETS THE IDEA

Goldwyn Releases

Made Big Campaign for The Hottentot

The Marlow Theatre, Helena, Mont., seems to have gone about as far as any house in putting over The Hottentot, using everything from the open letter style to a strip of cartoons apparently framed from the single column displays. The open letter is not precisely that, but rather a type talk in which the "better than" Skin Deep is dragged in. This goes a little further and adds that it has fun "like Dr. Jack." It might have added that it had horses "like The Kentucky Derby." But all this is incidental to a convincing line of talk which even the comparison style cannot hurt. This is better hooked in than most comparisons and helps to put the punch into the argument. This was a "coming" announcement. The cartoon strip was used the day before and employs six single-column cuts, displayed as shown. The opening was a four twelves with plenty of selling talk and sufficient cut material to help it over. The Hottentot is one of the plays in which cuts seem to help, because the First National publicity has supplied a number of strong drawings of the horse episodes which can be put to a variety of uses. As a matter of fact, the cuts for The Hottentot are much above the average, and practically all form

Made His Price Tag Sell the Production

"Usual prices" for a feature is a common form of appeal, but we do not recall having seen this device more strongly played up than in this display from the Paragon Theatre, Beacon, N. Y., where Ed R. Moore makes the price almost twice as bold as the title. It is something more than a year "from its season's run on Broadway," and Beacon is pretty close to Broadway, at that, but that was probably on the cut and Mr. Moore did not take the trouble to slice it. The price is the thing, and the chance of seeing the wickedest woman in the world for only 28 cents is certainly an opportunity not to be neglected. The advertisement is not what might be termed artistic, but Mr. Moore knows his clientele and he sells them on the best approach. He gives them a big bargain. He got the money, and, since he did, it is a better display than one which the commentators might rave about, but which did not yield financial results. The

BILLY JIM. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Stone. Who ever did not play this picture should by all means book it; you can't go wrong. Played "Fighting Blood" in connection and every one was pleased with the program. Used ones, threes, photos, slides. Good attendance. Joseph Schlaht, Opera House, Bowdle, South Dakota.

FIGHTING BLOOD. (5,000 feet). Star, George O'Hara. A very good picture; well played. Pleased good business. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GAY AND DEVILISH. (4,800 feet). Star, Doris May. I can see no excuse either for the name or for the picture. No wonder they don't come to see Doris May. Usual advertising. Poor attendance. Draw retired farmers and villagers. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

KICKBACK. (5 reels). Star, Harry Carey. Not near the picture that "Good Men and True" is. Lacks the humor and general audience appeal. The fight scenes are undoubtedly harder on Carey, but do not go over half as well on screen as "Good Men and True." In that picture the suspense is "awful" when Harry gets the drop on the Bad Chinaman. Advertising slant, the star. Good attendance. O. J. Ramey, Lyons Theatre, Lyons, Colorado.

THELMA. (6,000 feet). Star, Jane Novak. I did a very good business on this picture. Many favorable comments. Go after this one and boost it. Used six, three, one, trailer, lobby. Very good attendance. Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Featured cast includes Ralph Lewis. A wonderful box office attraction and a good audience picture. Advertising slant, fire run during afternoon. Very good attendance. Big city; draw from middle class. Admission twenty-five cents. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

TWO KINDS OF WOMEN. (6,000 feet). Star, Pauline Frederick. Very good outdoor picture for a small town. Book it. Price was right for me and came out in every angle. Usual advertising gave fair attendance. Town of 1,500; draw all classes. Admission 10-22. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WHEN LOVE COMES. (4,800 feet). Star, Helen Jerome Eddy. Harrison Ford also plays in this. Has miniature flood scene. A good one to let alone. Used regular advertising. Rotten attendance. Draw working element in town of 8,000. General admission 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

First National

BEAUTIFUL LIAR. (5,236 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Nothing to it. The first MacDonald that didn't get by here. Fair attendance. Town of 500. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. (7,268 feet). Featured cast. Might have been a good picture if all the print had been there, but was a poor show as it was sent to us. Poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class. Admission 10-25. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre (500 seats), Lewistown, Ohio.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. (7,268 feet). Featured cast. This is what we call a Real picture, full of action, lots of laughs and perhaps a tear. Wesley Barry sure is fine in this picture. Give us more pictures like this one. Used six, threes, ones, slide. Small town. Fair attendance. G. D. Hughes, Liberty Theatre, Heavener, Oklahoma.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,050 feet). Features dog "Strongheart." They like this dog here and we did very nicely with the picture. He's a very clever beast and they've made the story fit him pretty closely. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists returned good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,050 feet). Features dog "Strongheart." Very good. Opened big and held up exceptionally well for next two days. Usual advertising gave great attendance. Draw high class, city of 28,000. Admission twenty-five cents. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. (6,292 feet). All star cast. They seemd to like this picture. Not much to it but put on with the usual Sennett snap; action, titles, pretty girls. Draw family class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

DINTY. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Good picture. Advertising usual. Attendance fair. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FORBIDDEN THING. (6,700 feet). Star cast, Allan Dwan production. A wonderful picture. My people liked it very much. Advertised with one, three, six, 11x14, slide. Fair attendance. Draw general type in town of 1,100. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

GREAT ADVENTURE. (5 reels). Star, Lionel Barrymore. Very good picture. Barrymore very good, drawing card here. Patrons well pleased. Used ones, threes, sixes, heralds, paper. Fairly good attendance. Draw farmers and residents; town of 1,400. Admission twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby for Knight Brothers, Opera House, Ontario, Canada.

HER MAD BARGAIN. (5,491 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Not liked here. They don't care for Miss Stewart. Fair attendance. Town of 500. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. This is sure a fine sea story. My people liked it very much. It has all the star's best in it; plenty of thrills and good acting. Usual advertising with window cards. Weather very bad, but a good crowd. Draw miners and railroaders in town of 1,100. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

JACKNIFE MAN. Star cast. Fair picture; some liked it and some didn't. Pretty good business, but many were disappointed. Good title for exploitation. Used carved toys and jacknife display, lobby, lithos, newspaper and window display. Fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. William L. Boulware, Forum Theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. (8,500 feet). Star, Miriam Cooper. A real picture; very pleasing and entertaining. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LIGHT IN THE DARK. (7,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. For me, a first class "lime." Story inconsistent—ludicrous to a degree. "Hope Hampton"—some one write and tell me what she is doing on the screen. Because of her "ability?" Had a fair matinee on this and the night "flivvered," frightfully. The audience laughed in the supposedly tense spots. Lon Chaney never had a chance. I'd say don't buy this at any price. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists. Attendance deservedly rotten. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LYING LIPS. (5,338 feet). Star, House Peters. This is certainly a big picture in every way; but it's better than two years old and as usual it cost all I took in. Had $2.92 left, and newspaper still unpaid. Used ones, lobby, newspaper. Good attendance. Draw merchants and families in town of 460. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

MASQUERADER (7,832 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. Picture dragged out too much; at times tiresome. Just ordinary feature. Paid too much to realize enough profit. Attendance only fair. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

OMAR THE TENTMAKER. (8,090 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. The public don't want to be bored with productions of this kind. Poor box office attraction; lots of complaints. Rate it sixty per cent. Poor attendance. Big city; draw middle class. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

PENROD. (8,037 feet). No good for us second night. People here won't pay twenty-five cents to see any kind of show. Should have been five reels instead of eight. Used threes, ones, photos. Attendance fair first night, poor second. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

SEVENTH DAY. (5,335 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Pulled best of week and pleased majority. Very light compared with "Tol'able David." Good attendance. Draw student and family trade in town of 4,000. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

TARZAN OF THE APES. Special cast. A good picture, well executed and splendidly played. Should please any audience. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Great picture, good business. Pleased all. Played eight days. Used lobby cards and newspapers. Draw better class. Good attendance. W. H. Lusker, Strand Theatre, Pasadena, California.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Were somewhat disappointed in this offering; not as good as her two previous pictures. We will have to give credit to the acting of both Miss Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien, but the vehicle is not of the nature to appeal to the average theatre-goer. Fair advertising slants. Fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-17-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

WOMAN CONQUERS. (5,102 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. If your patrons like MacDonald you may get by with it; if not, lay off. We can only say that this star's output is cheating us out of that much time; it is a shame that they should force exhibitors to play these pictures. I suppose a lot of you are tied up with a franchise like we are; if you are not, use your brains. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Straight From the Shoulder is proud of the men (and several ladies) whose reports make it the dependable tip department.

Late releases are given prominence as they arrive because it is these reports upon which a great many exhibitors will base their booking of these releases.

But don't think for a second that the older pictures are less important or that the folks who send tips on them are any the less appreciated.

The thing that is finest of all, though, is the way that real men, men worth while in this industry, take an interest and use the space always open for discussion of points that will better the department.

The President of the Arkansas M. P. T. O. A. gets the floor on the very important question of moral tone—and Mr. Collins says something you'll be glad to agree with.

ANY WIFE. (4,591 feet). Star, Pearl White. A storm blew attendance away, but those who saw it commented very favorably on it. Regular advertising, but attendance poor as above. Farm community of a thousand. Regular admission 10-30, specials 20-40. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

ARABIAN LOVE. (4,400 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A Sheik picture that out-Sheiks "The Sheik." Rental very reasonable. Business very good. Draw miners and railroad men in town of 7,125. Admission 10-30. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

CATCH MY SMOKE. (4,070 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Boys, Tom Mix draws them in for me. This one is certainly a great five-reel thriller. I can run a Tom Mix slide on the screen—that he is coming—and they will yell and holler. Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

CHASING THE MOON. (5,072 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Bad night, but everybody liked the Mix stunt picture. A crazy picture that is good. Plenty of fun and a long journey in an hour's time. Used one three, two ones, slide. Fair attendance. Draw family and residents in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Piland, Victory Theatre (250 seats), Cairo, Georgia.

CRUSADER. (4,780 feet). Star, William Russell. Fair program picture. Used regular advertising. Fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Some of my patrons told me this was the best ever. I consider it a good Mix picture. Regular advertising. Extra good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Very good Mix picture, but half of it was in foreign locales and that hurts a picture for my audience. They simply don't like it. Used six, ones, photos and heralds. Very good attendance. Draw town and country class in town of about 2,000. Admission 10-25. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Not up to standard set by Mix pictures. Disappointed a good many of my patrons. Used regular advertising. Attendance fair. Draw mixed type in town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

DRAG HARLAN. Star, William Farnum. The usual W. Farnum picture; nothing either to condemn or to commend. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7 reels). Stars, Estelle Taylor, Lewis Stone. I was the "Fool" for booking it. The picture business is just seven years ahead of this style of entertainment. Advertised in newspapers. Poor attendance. Draw family trade in small town. Admission, matinee 10-17; evenings, 17-28. J. N. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

FOOTLIGHT RANGER. (4,729 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Different from the usual Charles Jones, but will go over, especially with Jones fans. Town of 7,500. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

GLEAM O' DAWN. (4,178 feet). Star, John Gilbert. This was the first appearance of Gilbert here and he seemed to please very much. A good program picture. Advertised with ones, photos, slide. Fair attendance. Big city, draw from church community. Admission 10-20. P. J. DelGrande, Jr., Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

GREAT NIGHT. (4,346 feet). Star, William Russell. Had a good house and this pleases nearly everyone. This is an interesting story of a millionaire who must marry in a month or lose a fortune. Used one, three, slide, photos. Good attendance. Draw working people from shoe factory, etc., in town of 3,500. Admission, children ten, adults twenty-five cents. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, features horse "Tony." A picture of irresistible appeal because of the superb intelligence of Tom's horse. Draws class of patrons who rarely go to see Mix. Good enough for any house. Everyone praised it. Advertising slant, boost the horse, he's great. Had good attendance, drawing neighborhood class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

LIGHTS OF THE DESERT. (4,809 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Very, very good program picture. Story exceptionally interesting. Fair attendance in small town, draw general type. Admission 10-15. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Not a great action picture, but at the same time an interesting Western story. John Gilbert, supported by Carmel Myers, does some more wonderful work. Fine picture for Western fans. Advertised with one one, one three, photos. Attendance above average. Draw factory people

in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania

MONEY TO BURN. (4,580 feet). Star, William Russell. A little better; a good story, well played. They liked it very much; many comments. Usual advertising pulled good attendance. Draw miners and railroad men in town of 1,100. Admission 10-20. T. J. Rickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. I played this second run in the middle of Lent and turned 'em away. It certainly is a great production and one that will draw well. Used regular advertising with good attendance. Draw mixed crowd in big city, 44,000. Admission 10-17-20-25. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Best business in quite a while; pleased everyone and sent them away saying good things about it. College professors, presidents, students, club leaders, and even the general public, were pleased. Used banner, window cards, newspaper campaign, ones, heralds, slide, photos, etc. Had extra good attendance in college town of 5,000. Admission on this 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

MY FRIEND THE DEVIL. (9,555 feet). All star cast. In eight reels, should be five. Fair picture, but poor box office attraction. One of the Specials that should be program pictures and that they force us to take to get Mix and other stars. Worth program price to me, but no more. Used billboards and newspapers. Poor attendance. Small town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

NERO. (11,500 feet). Star cast. I was the least bit afraid of this one as business was "off" on "Queen of Sheba," but I find out that there is no comparison. "Nero" drew people that very seldom come to picture shows. It drew well and pleased a hundred per cent. Used twenty-four, sixes, threes, ones, slide, photos, with above results. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

NERO. (11,500 feet). All star cast. A splendid picture. House packed for two nights. Pleased school people as well as others. Book this and watch the receipts flow in. Advertised with everything imaginable. Attendance splendid. Draw better class in town of 2,850. Robert Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

OVER THE HILL. (11,000 feet). Star, Mary Carr. Very good picture. Holds interest throughout. First two or three reels are filled with comedy. Had good attendance in town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS. (4,668 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Circus was big attraction to patrons; escaping lions brought them to their feet. Fine print. Sunshine comedy "Splitting Hairs" (see report under heading of Comedies). Advertised with photos, slide, paper. Attendance good. Draw working people in town of 3,500. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS. (4,668 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Nothing big. The usual circus picture which should please. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. A long-drawn-out, weary, teary sobster; padded beyond the limit and one actor in it that would drive an audience to drink—Percy Helton gave a performance supposedly serious and got more laughs than the comedian. The theme is done to death and if I was any exhibitor I'd omit this from my bookings; decidedly not liked here. Advertised with heralds, threes, ones and photos, to health seekers and tourists. Attendance poor, but plenty enough. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. An exceedingly good picture for here; well played and intensely interesting. Mary Carr is a wonderful character and her acting is also wonderful. Some patrons who like light and more frivolous pictures may not like "Silver Wings," but we liked it here. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. A fine picture to lose money on; Mary Carr is good, but picture is far below standard—too serious. Used newspaper, posters, photos. Very poor attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 5,000. Admission 15-30. Gus Frank, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

STRENGTH OF THE PINES. (4,382 feet). Star, William Russell. Good Saturday night program feature. Went well with "Buffalo Bill" Serial (Universal) and Universal one reel comedy. Used ones, threes, slide. Fair attendance. Draw general type in town of about 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TROOPER O'NEIL. (4,862 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. One of his extra good ones. The picture stood up pretty well, but here was handicapped with poor vaudeville. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

UP AND GOING. (4,350 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Fairly good Mix picture, but not up to the standard., but pleased very well. Advertised with ones, threes, sixes, window cards. Admission twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby, for Knight Brothers, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

VIRGIN PARADISE. Star, Pearl White. Seven reels, ordinary plot, but thrills enough to satisfy the average fan, in fact, can say it pleased around ninety per cent. Can be booked to advantage wherever Pearl White is popular. Used threes, ones, slide, dodgers. Fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,400. Admission 10-20 to 10-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

YOSEMITE TRAIL. (4,735 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Pleased the majority. The Farnum boys usually please in our house. Fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

Suggestion for Improving Reports

E. W. Collins, Grand, Liberty, Empire Theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas, touches a point you can't take exception to.

"Since you were good enough to recommend to others my plan for making best use of 'S. F. T. S. Reports,' I am going to take the liberty of making a suggestion to you that, I believe, would add to the value of the reports generally.

"I have just returned from a most enthusiastic and successful convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, of which I have the honor to be President. Down there I found all exhibitors extremely anxious for ABSOLUTE CLEANLINESS on the screen.

"This was the dominant note of the convention.

"My suggestion is as follows: Why not have each exhibitor who reports on a picture give his opinion of the Moral Tone of that picture and then print it in black-face type?

"On the report which I am sending herewith I am following my suggestion as outlined above. I think that the fact that a picture is scrupulously clean is a more desirable quality than being a hundred per cent pleaser.

"If we are to shake off the reputation for immorality that has been fastened upon us from outside sources, we must do it ourselves by eliminating all filth and suggestiveness from the pictures we show.

"There has been a marked tendency on the part of the producers to comply with the public demand for cleaner pictures, but some directors become so thoroughly saturated with their surroundings that they lose their perspective.

"I am of the opinion that all concerned in this industry would prefer CLEANLINESS. Let us start in your columns by stamping the moral tone on every picture. In this way we may discourage the production of unclean pictures and encourage the making of the kind that we can build business upon."

Black-face type is physically difficult to included in the press work, but we'll shoot the Moral Tone addition prominently if you'll all back up Mr. Collins in this mighty worthy campaign.

Goldwyn

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE. (5 reels). Featured cast. An eighty per cent program picture. Will please wherever shown. Advertising nothing special. Fair attendance. General draw in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20 to 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BOYS WILL BE BOYS. (4,300 feet). Star, Will Rogers. This picture did not go over extra and think it more for school children. This is the second Will Rogers picture that we played and don't want any more. Usual advertising. Mixed patronage. Very good attendance. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre, Albany, Minnesota.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Featured cast. Allen Holubar production. Extraordinarily good. Fairly good drawing picture. Advertising slant, the very best picture. Draw society class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Chas. R. Holz, Strand Theatre, San Enselmo, California.

GLORIOUS FOOL. (5,392 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Comedy drama of the best type, with a clean, wholesome plot. Can't go wrong on this class of picture. If all pictures were as clean as this one the censors would all be looking for work. Advertised with ones, six, slide. Fair attendance. General draw in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GLORIOUS FOOL. (5,392 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Here is a pretty good one with Helene Chadwick as the leading lady. The two stars are well liked here and drew a pretty good house. Draw second and third class, town of 1,100. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

GLORIOUS FOOL. (5,392 feet). Star, Richard Dix, supported by Helen Chadwick. How could one be bad with this team? It's a knockout and the print was in good shape. Will please all classes. Draw all classes in small town. Good attendance. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

MAN WITH TWO MOTHERS. (4,423 feet). Stars, Cullen Landis, Mary Alden. Not a drawing card here, but the picture ends well and will get by without kicks. Regular advertising. General patronage. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Okahoma City, Oklahoma.

NIGHT ROSE.. (6 feels). Star cast includes Lon Chaney. Here is one that will stand all the pressure you will put behind it. It's an old one but sure a good one and the print was just fine. My patrons raved over it. Used good advertising, lobby and six sheets. Draw in small town. Good attendance. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

POOR RELATION. (4.601 feet). Star, Will Rogers. Fair program picture. Star carries off part well. Pleased over eighty per cent of the patrons who attended. Used ones, threes, slide. Poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

STRANGERS BANQUET. (8,531 feet). Star cast includes Claire Winsor. An extra good picture and well worth seeing. The press spoke very highly of this one. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THEODORA. (10,000 feet). Feature cast. A truly remarkable picture. They claim to have spent $3,000,000 and used 25,000 people in making this production. It is one of the few pictures that looks as though the claim were true. Pleased all who saw it. Fair attendance. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

WHAT HAPPENED TO ROSA. (5 reels). Star, Mabel Normand. For me a lemon, absolutely no good, and if she always plays the kind of part she played in this, it'll be the last time, too. Regular advertising. Good attendance. Draw laboring class, mining town. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

Hodkinson

CAMERON OF ROYAL MOUNTED. (5,600 feet). Star, J. P. McGown. This isn't an extraordinary feature; just an ordinary picture of the Northwest. Did fair business, though. The title is a drawer. Used ones, threes, sixes, mail, photos, slide. Fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 2,850. Regular admission 10-15. Robert Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

FIFTY CANDLES. (5,600 feet). Featured cast. Kind of disappointing. Star could have made a hit with a little more pep. Splendid photography and titles. I advertised it as a spook picture, but the press sheet is misleading. Advertising slants just ordinary. Fair attendance. Draw working class in town of 1,500. Admission 15-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

FREE AIR. (5,600 feet). Featured cast. A splendid little program picture that pleased a small audience. Didn't draw at all as no one knew anythting about the cast. Advertised with ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide. Poor attendance. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FREE AIR. (5,600 feet). Featured cast. A pleasing little picture that will get by. Regular advertising. Fair attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

Here's "Big Game"

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA (Universal-H. A. Snow prod.) We played this picture before Universal took it over and charged fifty cents, and believe us when we say, "I's a sure money getter!" We received the support of the schools and of everybody in town. You are cheating your patrons if you do not show them this wonderful production.

The best part of it is you will do better the second day than the first. We billed town (5,000) and country and attendance was easily 75 per cent of the population of town. C. L. Laws, T. & D. Theatre, Watsonville, California.

HEADLESS HORSEMAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Will Rogers. An exhibitor can put this show over big by co-operating with the schools, as classics in pictures are very few. A picture for the better class of pictures and for the admirers of Will Rogers. Advertised with regular paper, also had teachers announce a matinee for children. Good attendance for matinee and night. Draw residential class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. James N. Fisher, Lyric Theatre, Versailles, Kentucky.

KENTUCKY COLONEL. (5,800 feet). All star cast. A very entertaining picture, with shots of comedy and heart pathos; lot of action, too, and went over good, but could not get them in. Those that saw it were satisfied. Regular program. Regular advertising. Fair attendance. Draw mixed class in mining town. Admission 10-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

MAN OF THE FOREST. (6,800 feet). Featured cast. A very fair Western. Good scenery, good action, good plot. My people well satisfied. Used author tie-up (Zane Gray), threes, window cards. Draw good class railroaders in railroad division point. Admission 20-40. H. G. Braden, "Little Red School" Theatre, Avery, Idaho.

RIDERS OF THE DAWN. An excellent picture of its kind; in fact, it's about the best Zane Gray I've seen. Hodkinson is an excellent company to do business with. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 2,000. Admission, except Specials, 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

SLIM SHOULDERS. (6,050 feet). Star, Irene Castle. Very ordinary program picture. Too "dressed up" for most people. Regular advertising gave good attendance. General draw in small town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

SPENDERS. (5 reels). Featured cast. Good program picture. Some clever comedy. Pleased a fair audience. Film poor. Advertised with threes, ones, photos, newspaper. Draw general class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,265 feet). Star cast includes Lon Chaney, Billie Dove. This is a very good sea story, one that is interesting from beginning to end. Will please all. Advertised with trailer, lobby, newspaper. Good attendance. Draw mixed and transient classes in town of 7,500. Admission 10-25. William H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

BROADWAY ROSE. (7,277 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Fair only. Scenery and dancing of Mae Murray is all this picture has. Don't pay too much for this picture. Used cut-outs of Mae Murray, twenty-fours, newspaper. Fair attendance. Draw home class in town of 5,000. Admission including war tax, 10-28. C. L. Laws, T. & D. Theatre, Watsonville, California.

CONQUERING POWER. (5,500 feet). Featured cast. Good to fair. Some liked it and some didn't. My opinion is, a good program offering and will not class as a Special with advanced prices. Advertised with heralds, mailing list, posters, photos. Draw small town patronage. Fair attendance. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

FASCINATION. (7,940 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Not as good as "Peacock Alley." Didn't draw good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FORGET-ME-NOT. (6 reels). Featured cast. Patrons commented very favorably on this show. People are just as fond of a cry as of a laugh. Usual advertising gave good, mixed attendance. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

GLASS HOUSES. (5 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Very good program picture. Viola is well liked here. If I want to make some money, all I have to do is to get her. Some said it was the best picture we have had for a long time. Handbills and newspaper advertising gave good attendance in town of 500, drawing all classes. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

HANDS OF NARA. (6,000 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. Miss Young appeared to very good advantage and her acting pleased the audiences. She had good support and the picture enjoyed pleased good business. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HEARTS OF FLAME. (8,110 feet). All star cast. Awonderful picture, but title did not draw. Used lobby, newspaper, billboards, program. Fair attendance. Draw mixed class in large city. Admission 10-25. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

HATE. (5,500 feet). Star, Alice Lake. Good, but why should an exhibitor waste his time and money on pictures that don't draw? Not yet have we made a dime on any of these Lake subjects. Used one, three, slide, photos. Poor attendance. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats). Aberdeen, Mississippi.

INFAMOUS MISS REVELL. (6 reels). Star, Alice Lake. Good program picture. Star is well liked here. Used ones, three, stills, heralds, newspaper. Good attendance. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

JUNE MADNESS. (5,600 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Very clever comedy. Pleased well. Miss Dana is very popular. Advertised with lobby, newspaper. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in large city. Admission 10-35. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor who created title role on stage. Laurette Taylor gives a wonderful portrayal of her famous "Peg" in the screen version of the play. The picture is worthy of showing in any house and its comedy is a delight. The elimination of the court scene at the end would be a great help. This one gave my patrons excellent satisfaction. Advertising slant, boost popularity of star and play. Attendance fine considering weather. Draw usual small town type, town of 3,000. Admission 15-20. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. (10,467 feet). Stars, Alice Terry, Lewis Stone. A very fine picture; two reels too long. Artistically produced, splendidly acted, but comparatively no punch. They may talk "Four Horsemen" prices on this and it isn't worth half. You can't find one bit of fault with this picture and you will also wonder why they don't come to the box office. I ascribe it to the lack of punch. It was not a money-making picture here; take that into consideration when you are buying it. Used photos, mailing list and other accessories. Draw health seekers and tourists. Attendance fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,800 feet). Star cast includes Blanche Sweet. A picture with an excellent cast, lots of laughs and several thrills. Won't please everybody, but heard very good reports. Advertised with one, threes, posters, slide, newspaper. Drew well considering the weather. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester Indiana.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. (5,481 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. A splendid picture and will please the most exacting. Just a trifle old, but, nevertheless, business was as good as expected. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide. Fair attendance. Draw neighborhood type; town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Averdeen, Mississippi.

ANNA ASCENDS. (5,959 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Title should read, "Anna Ascends for a piece of cheese—good old wagon, but done broke down." Business 'way off. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Admission 35-50-75. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

ANNA ASCENDS. (5,959 feet). Star, Alice Brady. A very good picture. I played this with a Larry Semon, as Alice Brady means nothing to my patrons after some of the "Realart stuff," and I did a very nice business and every one liked the program as a whole. Uusual advertising to health seekers and tourists brought good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranas Lake, New York.

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,229 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Went fine. Pleased all, we believe. Regular advertising yielded fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,150. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Now we have it! When the patrons stop at the box office and comment on a picture, you may put it down it is a crackerjack. It sure pleased them all. And the pretty part about it is, we were able to make some money with it, because we bought it right. What we cannot understand is why Paramount did not put it out as a Special. Of course they did not know what they had. Fair advertising angles. Attendance good. Draw better class in town of 7,400. Admission 10-17-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A novelty picture that will draw big. If it won't draw for you, then nothing will. By all means, play it. Advertising slants, star and story. Attendance fine. Draw mixed class, all nationalities, in town of 5,000. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado. (Mr. Hoover has just opened another theatre, from which you will probably get some mighty useful reports.)

First Tips On Recent Releases

THE LEOPARDESS (Paramount-Alice Brady). Very good, but did not draw; but pleased all who saw it. Fair attendance. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

THREE JUMPS AHEAD (Fox-Tom Mix). The picture was very good. Williac Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THE GLIMPSES OF THE MOON (Paramount-Nita Naldi, Bebe Daniels). Beautiful picture, beautifully portrayed by two beautiful stars. The picture enjoyed a week's good business. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ADAM'S RIB (Paramount-Star cast). A very good production and one of the very best of the season. Everyone liked it. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MAD LOVE (Goldwyn-Pola Negri). Foreign stuff does not take well in Oklahoma City, but star being the reputed fiancee of Chaplin, the picture was well patronized. Some liked it and some did not. William Noble, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED (First Natl.-Featured cast). Milton Sills, John Bowers and Marguerite De La Motte in the cast. Not as good as the former choice pictures—"Skin Deep," "Hottentot," "Lying Lips" and "Mother O' Mine." Just fair. Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

WHITE FLOWER (Paramount-Betty Compson). A decided novelty that drew them in for seven days; business better at end of week than beginning. Jay A. Haas, Clune's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, California.

IS DIVORCE A FAILURE? (Assoc. Exhib.-Leah Baird). This smashed the box office. Got Miss Baird to stop off here on her way to New York for personal appearance. Given keys to City by Mayor and newspapers carried columns and pictures of all kinds. Biggest success of any personal appearance ever here. Over 19,000 admissions; and first day drizzled from morning to midnight, other two days hot. Picture A No. 1 and star made a friend of the whole town. Will Horwitz, Jr., Iris Theatre, Houston, Texas.

BOBBED HAIR. (4,395 feet). Star, Wanda Hawley. Our small-town audience didn't seem to catch the drift on this one. Miss Hawley is a very good star for us, and is good in this picture; but there isn't much to the picture for a small-town bunch. Too much Greenwich Village stuff for 'em. Advertising slants, play up the star. Poor attendance. Draw small town and transient trade in town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre (250 seats), Trinity, Texas.

CLARENCE. (6,140 feet). Star cast includes Wallace Reid, Agner Ayres and May MacAvoy. Holy Week and good business. Every one pleased. Usual advertising pulled good attendance. Town of 9,237. Admission 22 cents. H. V. Smooths, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

CONRAD IN QUEST OF HIS YOUTH. (5 reels). Star, Thomas Meighan. This picture will please the older people but the younger do not care for it. It will go over big if you have played "Manslaughter" and "Back Home and Broke." Those two pictures "made" Thomas Meighan. Used usual advertising. Attendance excellent Town of about 2,000, draw general class. Admission 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

CONRAD IN QUEST OF HIS YOUTH. (5 reels). Star, Thomas Meighan. Print in such bad condition that we are unable to make any kind of a report on the subject other than that the film had been cut so bad that only about half of the story remained and our patrons walked out. Why can't Paramount send out good prints to the small exhibitor? They are getting enough money to enable them to give us good prints. Used photos, heralds, ones and threes. Attendance fair. Mixed patronage. H. L. Bennett, Victoria Theatre, Parsons, West Virginia.

CRADLE. (4,698 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. Best picture with Ethel Clayton we have shown, but she appeared in so many sorry ones she is no good here. Used newspaper and billboard. Attendance poor. Town of about 7,500. Draw all classes. Admission 10-25. Wm. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

CRADLE OF COURAGE. (5,000 feet). Star, William S. Hart. A very good picture. Bill Hart's pictures always take well in Oklahoma City. Wm. Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. The story fine but did not draw. Pleased all who saw it. Used lobby, newspaper, and billboard. Attendance poor. Town of about 19,000. Admission 10-35. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

HELIOTROPE. (6 reels). Star cast. Very good one. Pictures like this build up the business for any exhibitor. Advertising same as usual. Attendance fair. Town of about 1,500. Draw all kinds. Admission 10-22. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

HER GILDED CAGE. (6,249 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An average program picture of rather below average pulling power. It's forced and unreal. Doesn't add to Gloria's popularity. Usual advertising. Attendance fair. Mixed patronage. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HER GILDED CAGE. (6,249 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A good box office bet and pleases. The story is improbable but is well handled and will please the great majority. It is a richly done production. Advertising angles, star and elegance of production. Attendance good. Town of about 14,000. Draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HER OWN MONEY. (4,981 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. Fair entertainment, but so many similar stories. Why can't we have more original stuff like "Is Matrimony a Failure?" Used star's name for advertising. Average attendance. Town of about 2,500. Draw all classes. Admission 5-10, 10-20. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

HOMESPUN VAMP. (5 reels). Star, May McAvoy. A fair program picture. Used regular advertising. Attendance fair. Town of 1,000. Draw mixed class. Admission 10-25 to 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

IDOL OF THE NORTH. (5,802 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A weak feature, in my estimation. Saved the show by using a good strong feature with it. Used ordinary advertising. Attendance good. Town of about 300. Draw rural classes. Admission, 20-30, Special 22-39. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

IMPOSSIBLE MRS. BELLEW. (7,155 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Excellent; pleased, used it for Sunday School class benefit and more than made good. Usual advertising. Attendance fair. Town of about 17,000. Draw family class. Admission. 10-17 Matinee, 17-28 evening. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Star cast includes Leatrice Joy and Jacqueline Logan. No pull. One of those high-priced productions that are perfect on paper and which you expect to do business on, but which falls flat. Leatrice Joy is superb in the lead; all others of the cast are splendid. But as a money maker, it simply isn't there. This is one of those kinds that some exhibitors say, "Play it if it does not make money; it adds prestige to your house." Ever try paying film bills with the prestige you have acquired? Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Star cast. This one is good but too heavy for the average person. Will not draw at the box office. Used title and story for advertising. Attendance fair. Town of about 4,100. Draw mixed class. All nationalities. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. A picture of the New York underworld. One of the best of its type we have ever shown. But the cold fact stands out that it is not a box office picture as the title suggests nothing to theatre goers. Advertising angles, poor. Attendance poor. Town of about 7,400. Draw better class. Admission 10-17-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good crook picture. My people like it and paid to see it, even coming stronger second night. Used window cards and newspapers. Big attendance. Draw family trade in city of 17,000. Admission, matinee, 10-17; night, 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

LADIES MUST LIVE. (7,482 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A very good picture. Grownups thought it good but kids could not see it. Advertised with newspaper, posters. Good attendance. City of 12,000; draw all classes. Admission varies. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

MAN FROM HOME. (6,895 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Here is a real box office "bet" and we are surprised that Paramount did not charge a "special" price for the rental. Of course they did not know what they had until it had already been sold and included in the group. But go to it. It will appeal to the patrons because it's a modern, everyday subject. Used average advertising. Attendance good. Town of 7,100. Draw better class. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

THE MAN WHO SAW TOMORROW. (6,993 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A very ordinary picture that did not please for us. Improbable story and seemed loosely thrown together. Cannot recommend it very highly. May get by with Meighan's friends. Used star for advertising angle. Attendance fair. Town of about 14,000. Draw merchants, clerks and farmers. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,696 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. A wonderful production that will bring out people that are not regular picture show patrons. The storm scene is one of the best ever filmed. Business only fair on account of cold, rainy weather. Used six, threes, ones, photos, heralds and newspaper. Town of about 2,000. Picture drew better class. James N. Fisher, Lyric Theatre, Versailles, Kentucky.

Here Are Some Late Ones

FURY (First Natl.-Barthelmess). A splendid sea story splendidly played to splendid business for entire week. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MONEY, MONEY, MONEY (First Natl.-Katherine MacDonald). Thought this next to the best MacDonald picture I've run. Her last three pictures have been good. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

FACE ON BARROOM FLOOR (Fox-H. B. Walthall. Book it; you can't lose. One of the best Specials Fox has put out. Only five reels, but it is equal to lots of the other kind. B. F. Trammell, Moran Theatre, Moran, Texas.

GARRISON'S FINISH (United Artists-Jack Pickford). Very good. Great horse race at finish pulled 'em out of their seats. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,696 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. Pleased 90%; splendid story that's sure to satisfy any type of audience. Attendance good. Small town. Draw general class. Admission 10-25. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

THE ORDEAL. (4,592 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Good picture, but did not draw as well as expected, nevertheless those that did see it were well pleased. Used ones, photos. slide. Attendance fair. City of 250,000. Draw church community class. Admission 20-10. P. J. DelGrande, Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

PINK GODS. (7,062 feet). Star cast. Just a fair picture rich in many ways, but Bebe Daniels sadly miscast. Attendance poor. Town of 1,600. High class patronage. Admission 10-25 to 50. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

PINK GODS. (7,062 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Unique subject, successfully treated; artistic embellishments; interesting throughout. Cast superb. Bebe Daniels' dramatic touch at finish excellent. Satisfy any audience. Good film. Reasonable rental. Boost the diamond element, boys. Diamonds, diamonds and more diamonds! Good attendance, drawing average small town class in town of 3,000. H. G. Mitchell, Opera House, Windsor, Nova Scotia, Canada.

PRINCE THERE WAS. (5,533 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A good picture, but not good enough for this star. Advertising slant is the star. Attendance fair. Regular small town of 2,300. Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

RENT FREE. (4,661 feet). Stars, Wallace Reid and Lila Lee. Very good. We never struck a poor Reid picture yet. Used 11x14, posters, slides. Very good attendance. Mining village of 1,700 Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

SINGED WINGS. (7,788 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. If your people come in to pass time it will suit them. If you have to play it don't go too strong on advertising. If not, use your judgment. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

SIREN CALL. (5,417 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Star always good. Very fine picture. Everybody liked it fine. Leading man, David Powell, played well with Dalton. Used many posters. Had a full house. J. M. Vidinha, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

THE THIRD KISS. Star, Vivian Martin. A good picture which enjoyed, pleased. Good business. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THIRTY DAYS. (7,788 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Reid's last picture is pretty fair. Nearly everybody has forgotten he's dead. Advertising slant, Reid's last picture, etc. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class, all nationalities, in town of 4,100. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

THRU A GLASS WINDOW. (4,490 feet). Star, May McAvoy. Just fair; quite a few walked out. Attendance poor. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (5,000 feet). Star cast, Fitzmaurice production. Interesting picture that held audience from start to finish. George Fitzmaurice seems to be a sure bet. Used throwaways. Mixed patronage. Attendance good. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. An excellent picture, liked by all. Acting very good. Did a fine business three days. Used newspapers, heralds. Draw neighborhood class. Very good attendance. March Burns, Family Theatre, Batavia, New York.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. A really great picture from all viewpoints. Good attendance. Draw general small town class. Admission 10-15. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. A wonderful picture. Our patrons well pleased. It will do better after the first few showings. Regular advertising gave good attendance. Draw home class in town of 5,000. Admission 10-28, war tax included. C. L. Laws, T. & D. Theatre, Watsonville, California.

TOO MUCH WIFE. Star, Wanda Hawley. A good program picture and one that was liked by our audiences. Draw the better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

TOP OF NEW YORK. (5,148 feet). Star, May McAvoy. One of the nicest little pictures you ever saw. We played in connection with Parent Teachers Association, and results were, all well pleased. Used heralds, ones, threes, photos, slide. Attendance good. Town of 4,200. Draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TOP OF NEW YORK. (5,148 feet). Star, May McAvoy. They liked this here. Good holiday attraction and different. Attendance fair. Family patronage. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

TOP OF NEW YORK. (5,148 feet). Star, May MacAvoy. Only fair. Advertised with newspaper, billboards. Draw general type in town of 9,237. Admission 10-20-30. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

UNDER THE LASH. (5,675 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gloria usually good in anything, in my estimation. Newspaper and poster advertising gave good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 12,000. Admission varies. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. This pleased them all, and is what I would call a one hundred per cent picture. The acting of Miss Rubens is great, but Lew Cody was miscast in this—can you imagine him as a Northwest Mounted Policeman? This is the only flaw my patrons found with this production. Attendance was fair on account of big blizzard raging at the time. You all didn't think we had blizzards down here, now, did you? Draw all classes in town of 2,500. Admission 15 to 20 cents. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. Very good picture and good box office attraction. Not a big Special, however, so buy right. Good exploitation material. Used special snow lobby. Had fair attendance. Draw regular small town; size 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star cast headed by Marion Davies. Pleased a hundred per cent. Miss Davies is very popular. Print was in fair shape. Used lobby, newspaper, billboards, handbills. Good attendance. City of 19,000. Admission 10-35. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Very fine. Exploited properly, this will bring you all kinds of cash. Now on second day of run. Business fine. Used history, author and star for advertising. Attendance good. Town 5,000. Draw mixed classes all nationalities. Admission 10-25 to 30-50. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A fine offering. Think Paramount ought to rent the above instead of playing sharing terms with a guarantee. Used extra advertising. Attendance good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WHITE OAK. (6,208 feet). Star, Wm. S. Hart. A good Western and will please wherever Hart is liked, and he sure is here. Draw better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. (5,947 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Good picture. Consider it the best Dalton I've seen for some time. City of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. (5,947 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Nothing big, but better than most Daltons. Fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

WORLD'S APPLAUSE. (6,526 feet). All-star cast. It's all in the title. Advertising slant, title. Fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,100. Admission 10-20-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

WORLD'S APPLAUSE. (6,256 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good picture but did not draw as well as her other pictures. Used heavy advertising. Fair attendance. City of 40,000. Draw family class. Admission 25-75. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. (5,030 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. An amusing story well acted out. It is hard to realize "Wally," with all his cheer, is gone. Attendance poor due to weather. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

YOUNG DIANA. (6,744 feet). Star, Marion Davis. Fair picture, but seemingly without drawing power. Usual advertising to mixed class drew fair attendance. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

A Preview

Charles H. Ryan very kindly shoots in a tip on one you'll be mighty eager to get the angle on: ABYSMAL BRUTE (Universal-Reginald Denny). Saw it at a preview showing. Prize ring story. Will go big with a male audience. On eight reels. Good entertainment. If your audience takes to "The Leather Pushers" this will go over for you. Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago.

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A big drawing card and a fine picture, a clean-cut comedy. All success to Harold in his new big feature work; it pleases every one. Used a twenty-four, three threes, 11x14, 22x28, goggles. Fine attendance. Draw country class and town of 1,700. Admission 10-20. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (462 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Not what was to be expected from Harold Lloyd. Only big bull from distributor. Did not please the audience. Is not worth the money I paid for it. Draw society class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Charles R. Holz, Strand Theatre, San Anselmo, California.

POWER WITHIN. (6 reels). Star cast includes William H. Tooker, Pauline Garon. Fair program. Rather draggy. Clean. Usual advertising gave poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

Playgoers

INNER MAN. (4,880 feet). Star, Wyndham Standing. Some beautiful wood and waterfall scenes in this, but they were given poor support by the cast. Played it along with "The Pilgrim" (reported issue previous to this), which accounts for good business. Used regular advertising. Draw mixed class in city of 44,000. Admission 10-17-20-25. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre (1,100 seats), Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

RUSE OF THE RATTLER. (4,759 feet). Star, J. P. McGowan. Good Western. Not as good as some of stars, but will draw. Advertising slant, the star. Good attendance. Draw mixed class, all nationalities, in town of 4,100. Admission 5-15-20. L. A. Hoover, Strand Theatre, Durango, Colorado. (This is the new house which enables Mr. Hoover to add more of his acceptable tips.)

Preferred Pictures

SHADOWS. (7,040 feet). Star cast includes Lon Chaney. A regular picture. Broke Wednesday night record; which was usually good; picture pleased. State Right boys are sure there. Used billboards, heralds, newspaper. Very good attendance. Draw working element in town of 8,000. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

Selznick

FORBIDDEN CITY. Star, Norma Talmadge (reissue). A real good production but hardly as pleasing as some of Norma's revivals. The "flu" didn't keep them away. Regular newspaper and lobby advertising pulled good attendance. Town of 1,474, average small town type. Admission, 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

LOVE IS AN AWFUL THING. (6,500 feet). Star, Owen Moore. Very good comedy, but not as good as "Reported Missing." However, it will please where they like light comedy. Used heralds, posters, mailing list. Small town draw. Fair attendance. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

ONE WEEK OF LOVE. (7,000 feet). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Good picture, but did not draw. "About two reels too long," was a comment heard. I thought likewise, but enjoyed the picture. Advertising slant, played up the star. Fair attendance. Draw working class in town of 1,500. Admission 15-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

MAN OF STONE. (5,000 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. One of his usual program pictures, but will not please on account of ending. Action rather slow and jerky. Print poor; haven't had a light print from Select yet; all scenes seem to be taken at night. Usual advertising. Good attendance on account of title, which is only a bluff. Small town. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

RECKLESS YOUTH. (5,700 feet). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Picture was not very bad, but people did not like it because star is new here. First picture with Elaine Hammerstein. Very small house. J. M. Vidinha, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

WIDE OPEN TOWN. (4,650 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. Played this program film against opposition, "Nero," and outpulled the "big" one, three to one, and they said they liked it. Good attendance. Draw family class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

WIDE OPEN TOWN. (4,650 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. An 85 per cent. picture. Everything good but a few poor "shots." Well acted and presented. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Town of 282. Admission, 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

United Artists

BIRTH OF A NATION. (12 reels). D. W. Griffith production. Twelve new reels. Patrons liked it. Most of my patrons have seen it before, but will go to see it any time they have a chance. Draw mixed class. Good attendance. Charles F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

DISRAELI. (6,800 feet). Star, George Arliss. Fine picture and good print, but brought out only a few high-class crowd, who come once a year, so they don't mean much. No more of that class for me. It's the poor people that count, after all, to go to the movies. Regular advertising gave me poorest attendance I've ever had. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

Universal

CANYON OF THE FOOLS. (5,180 feet). Star, Harry Carey. A clean-up. Grab it! Used big advertising; had big attendance. Large city. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

CAUGHT BLUFFING. (5,000 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Good picture for those who like Mayo. Used regular advertising. Good attendance. Draw rural type and town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre, Irvington, California.

FLAMING HOUR. (4,568 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Good picture with pleasing star. Seemed to please everybody. Also "In Days of Buffalo Bill" (see Serial heading tip later). Used an attractive lobby. Good attendance. J. N. Phillips, Ideal Theatre, Table Rock, Nebraska.

GENTLEMAN FROM AMERICA. (4,658 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Excellent; has everything and surprises every one, being better than they expect. Used fifty threes, seventy-five ones, all newspapers. Patronage, main street, drop in. Very good attendance. J. H. Enos, Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, California.

GENTLEMAN FROM AMERICA. (4,658 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A real comedy-drama with a real star. Used ones and photos. Good attendance. Draw working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. George M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (178 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

KINDLED COURAGE. (4,418 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Real good, clean Western drama with action and fun. The kind the kids and their elders like and one that helps get more business. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

MAN TO MAN. (5,629 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Just a Western melodrama. Advertising angles, star, Western locale, action. Had ordinary attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAN TO MAN. (5,629 feet). Star, Harry Carey. I didn't see this, but patrons pronounced it as a very good Western. Ordinary advertising gave fair attendance. Draw regular class in town of 3,000. Admission 15-20. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

PRISONER. (4,795 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A very good picture. Drew well and pleased them all. Rawlinson is well liked here. Also ran the thirteenth chapter of "In Days of Buffalo Bill." Used good lobby. Had good attendance. J. N. Phillips, Ideal Theatre (500 seats), Table Rock, Nebraska.

PRISONER. (4,795 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A program picture which will please; action throughout based on McCutcheon's novel, "Castle Craneycrow." Advertised with one three, four ones, newspaper. Good attendance. Draw regular small town class, town of 2,700. Admission 17-28. Stanley G. Allen, Allen Theatre (300 seats), Chatham, New York.

THE STORM. (7,400 feet). Star, House Peters. Very interesting picture. It drew a good attendance. However, the price was too high. Used heavy advertising. Had good attendance. Town of 1,150. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

THE STORM. (7,400 feet). Star, House Peters. Heard so much about this picture that I was disappointed. Wonderful scenery, good photography, but action slow. Had good attendance. Draw oil field class, town of 2,400. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre (800 seats), Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

Finds Old Ones Good

Mr. Chas. Martin—you all know his useful tips from the Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York—has something to say that many small town exhibitors will want to read:

"Who said old pictures don't draw people? That's only a salesman talk, so a fellow has to pay a lot of money for a film. I've tried everything and always make more money with an old picture and it don't cost me so much either. Whenever I get a chance to buy a good "old" picture, as long as the print is good, I always do so.

"After all it's the profit that counts—and a smiling audience; that's when I'm proud of running a theatre.

"So, take this tip, and you'll find that your pictures are known better if they are older, in small towns, for they are always somewhat behind time in my estimation. So why pay double or more for new Specials which in some cases are not as good as the old? First National exchange is always good with me in prints and service."

THE STORM. (7,400 feet). Star, House Peters. Tremendous picture; greatest forest fire scene ever put in a movie. Every exhibitor should book this picture and advertise it big and it will bring bigger results. Eight reels. Pleased a hundred per cent. Used special heralds, three sheets, ones and slides. Good attendance. Neighborhood house, drawing mixed class. M. Nickbarg, Lincoln Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. (7,047 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good picture, but considerably overrated. Not much to it outside of the star's work. Had fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class. Admission 10-25. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre (500 seats), Lewistown, Ohio.

THE FOX. (7 reels). Star, Harry Carey. Not the biggest Western that was ever made by a long shot. Rather draggy in places, but pleased the Western fans. Fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class. Admission 10-25. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre (500 seats), Lewistown, Ohio.

Vitagraph

ANGEL OF CROOKED STREET. (5,270 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. A good story and well acted. Miss Calhoun is very popular. Pleased a hundred per cent. Book it and boost it. Used lobby, newspaper, billboards. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in large city. Admission 10-35. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

PRODIGAL JUDGE. (7,803 feet). Star cast includes Jean Paige. Good. With four-piece orchestra played this to a S. R. O. house. Story good; action good; photography fair. Continuity draggy. Print good. Used heralds, ones, six, newspaper, 11x14s. Excellent attendance. Draw rural and small town of 282. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

SCARAB RING. (6 reels). Star, Alice Joyce. An old one, but one that holds the audience's attention throughout. Regular advertising gave good attendance. Draw rural type in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre, Irvington, California.

SON OF WALLINGFORD. (8 reels). Star cast. Very good eight-reel production which should please any audience. Everybody pleased. I bought this very reasonable and made a little money on this one. Used photos, heralds, one-sheets. Fair attendance. Draw common class, town of 400. Admission for this one, 15-25. J. I. McCarthy, Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

Warner Brothers

HEROES OF THE STREET. (6,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. A truly wonderful picture, worth being run in the best of towns. Chock full of laughter and pathos. Every one satisfied, as they well can be. Be sure and book it and you will make lots of friends. Used threes, bills, slides. Good attendance in town of 2,800, drawing all classes for this one. David W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Don't be afraid of this one, boys; it's one of the best bets of the season and will back up anything you say about it. Regular advertising yielded good attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 44,000. Admission 10-17-22-25. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

RAGS TO RICHES. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Fine picture; pleased every one, as Wesley always does here. Ones, photos, cards gave good attendance. Draw town and country class, town of 1,700. Admission 10-25 and 15-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

YOUR BEST FRIEND (Warner-Rapf). Star, Vera Gordon. (5 reels). More sob stuff for a sad world. Well done picture of the kind, however. Poor attendance. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewiston, Ohio.

Comedies

CASEY JONES, JR. (Educational-Mermaid). Not as good as "High Power," although above the average. Draw family and student classes, town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

CHOP SUEY (Educational-Christie). I didn't think it possible for any company to make such a poor "comedy (?)." Pulled it off after first show. Half of one per cent is right. Draw student and family type, town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

COPS (First Natl.-Keaton). They like this one as well as his old Metro comedies, and that is saying a lot. Advertised like a feature (which corresponds with the cost). Attendance was good. Town of 3,000, draw typical small town without foreigners. Admission, 15-20. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

GOOD SCOUT (Educational-Mermaid). Also pretty fair, but action is jumpy and drags in spots. Draws students and family class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa

PAUL PARROTT COMEDIES (Pathe). I find they are far better for my use than most two-reel comedies. Paul is a "comer." Draw regular type, small town, 1,474. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

SAWMILL (Vitagraph - Larry Semon). When this comedy was new it was bound to have been a good one—but!—about half of it was gone. Very bad print. Smith Read, Patriot Theatre, DeKalb, Texas.

SPLITTING HAIRS (Fox - Sunshine). This finished the program (feature "Shirley of the Circus") with the house practically in hysterics. Some comedy! Fine print. Draw working class in town of 3,500. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Collins gets help from Mr. Seymour; Mr. Lamere gets aid from Mr. Benson—and there are plenty more who get benefit from the tips of these gentlemen—
AND FROM YOUR TIPS!
Tell the folks when they help you and—
SEND REPORTS ALONG!

TIN BRONCHO (Fox-Sunshine). Was a real attraction in itself. Draw working people, town of 3,500. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Serials

JUNGLE GODDESS (Metro). Stars, Truman Van Dyke, Elinor Fields. A fair serial. Youngsters like it on account of wild animals. Use three sheets, cards. Good attendance. Draw all classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

KINGS OF THE FOREST (Universal-Roy Stewart). Action from beginning to end. Nuf sed. Used three, one, slide, photos. Good attendance. Draw all classes in big city, get ten cents always. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MAN AND BEAST (Educational hunting picture). Voted the best of its kind ever exhibited. Two reels of adventure and daring that in my opinion have never been equalled. Get it, and advertise it strong. Draw health seekers and tourists. Attendance excellent. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SAWING A LADY IN HALF (Clarion Photoplays). Get this two reel picture; you will never regret it. Certainly exposes the trick. A. R. Workman, Colisseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

WOLVES OF THE WATERFRONT (Universal-Jack Mulhall). A fair picture which played to fair business. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

State Rights

CHARGE IT (Equity). Star, Clara Kimball Young. (6,900 feet). Clara K. Young and Betty Blythe in some swell doings with plot, action and settings that will please. O. J. Ramey, Lyons Theatre, Lyons, Colorado.

COUNTRY FLAPPER (Producers Security). Star, Dorothy Gish. (5 reels). There is no plot to this picture; perhaps that is why it did not go over here. The majority complained against it. Usual posters, etc., gave fair attendance. Draw all classing in town of 1,000. Admission, 10-25. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre (245 seats), South Fallsburgh, New York.

DETERMINATION (U. S. Motion Picture). All star. (8 reels). This one fell flat. Was to play it two days, but had to take it off after first day. Print in awful condition—so badly cut could hardly follow the story. Used regular lobby, window cards, heralds. Had very poor attendance in town of 900, drawing regular small town type. Liberty Theatre, Sligo, Pennsylvania.

HILLS OF HATE (Arrow). Star, Jack Hoxie. Good Hoxie picture. For outdoor and Western stuff Hoxie will please. While he's not a great drawing card with us the average is a little better than the ordinary Western. Find him O. K. Draw middle class, city of 15,000. Admission, 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

I AM THE LAW (C. C. Burr). Stars, Gaston Glass, Kenneth Harlan, Alice Lake. Similar in story to the many "Northwesterns," but would pronounce it a fair program picture. It has a good cast and the picture was enjoyed in so-so fashion here—nothing to enthuse over. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists gave fair attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SANTA FE TERROR (Richard & Flynn). All star cast. This is a very good Indian drama in five reels. If you want an old-time Indian drama with lots of Indians you will find it in this one. It must be an old Bison, like we used to get years ago. It also has Francis Ford. If you play it don't overlook the six sheet; lots of Indians on it. Might say the print is in good shape and you will find lots of action. If you want a good, old-time Indian picture you will find this O. K.; and the price is right. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. (6,000 feet). This is the kind that gets a good word as patrons go out. It does not cost a fortune, either. Advertised thoroughly; had fair attendance. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). Star Johnny Hines. (6,000 feet). Great. Best Johnny Hines picture to date. It's a scream from start to finish. One of the best comedy dramas I have ever played. Hines is a sure bet; you can't go wrong on booking this.

In Last Mail

These came in just now—you get them hot from the mail.

SAFETY LAST (Pathe-Lloyd). Biggest laugh ever made. Harold Lloyd positively greatest bet in pictures today. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

LUCK (C. C. Burr-Johnny Hines). A humdinger of a comedy-drama. Johnny Hines rushes through six reels of mighty fine action with "divil" a let-up. Go get it, boys, and go to it. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

(Combined report from card and blank from same contributor.) Draw best class in city of 28,000. Admission, 25 cents. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM (Arrow). Star cast. (8 reels). Good picture. Good business. More than satisfied. (Draw regular type, small town, 2,300. Matinee admission, 10-15; night, 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Asplay Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

WEST OF THE PECOS (Wm. Steiner). Star, Neal Hart. (4,500 feet). A dandy little program picture. Neal Hart draws here; but I struck a bad print. Used six, three, one, slide, lobby. Had fair attendance Holy Week. Draw all classes in big city. Admission, 10 cents always. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN? (nothing!) (Equity). Star cast. (6 reels). Oh, boys, boys! If there ever was a showman's picture, this is "Her." Has everything to please any person that has brains; and advertising possibilities possessed by no other picture I can think of. More power and more business to the man who gives us Independent pictures like this. Advertising slants, title, cast, author, everything. Attendance good, not big. Draw all classes in town of 2,500. Admission, 5-10 and 10-20. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

THE WOLVERINE (Commonwealth). Star, Helen Gibson. I asked for report on this one, but couldn't get one. No wonder! Five reels of fancy scenery, most of audience walked out in second and third reels, and remainder "just remained" (as one said) "to see how much worse it could get." Advertised with newspaper and window cards. Attendance, fair at beginning, at end about twenty-five people. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

"The Bright Shawl"

Richard Barthelmess' Newest for First National Furnishes Unusually Fine Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Adapted from a widely read novel of the same title by Joseph Hergesheimer, "The Bright Shawl," a First National production, starring Richard Barthelmess, assisted by Dorothy Gish, furnishes entertainment of a high order that should appeal to all classes of patrons, and while there is considerable deviation from the book, the effect has been to heighten the dramatic intensity.

Director John S. Robertson and those associated with him deserve high praise for the magnificent production given this story. Laid in Cuba in the early fifties, the exteriors were filmed there and the studio sets have been so finely made and there is such an air of authenticity about them as to make the spectator wonder just what is real and what has been duplicated.

Despite the fact that the players appear in the quaint costumes of seventy-odd years ago, they fit so into the story and surroundings that not only do they not detract from the interest, but add strongly to the artistic side. Then, too, it is a story of human emotions that is just as vital today.

The story deals with the adventures of an American who aided in an unsuccessful fight for Cuban independence. The indignities his friends suffered under Spanish rule as presented on the screen arouses intense sympathy on the part of the spectator and makes one's blood rise. This gives tremendous force to the action, which is worked out in such a manner that it holds the interest with unusual intensity.

The acting of the principals is exceedingly fine and thoroughly in keeping with the story and technical excellence of the production. Richard Barthelmess as the American hero gives a performance which is well up to his usual high standard. Dorothy Gish as a Spanish dancer in sympathy with the Cubans, a role that is quite different from any of her former characterizations, gives a superb performance and at times threatens to "walk away with the picture." Anders Randolf is particularly forceful and convincing in the heavy role of the Spanish Captain, while a unique and excellent portrayal is that of a newcomer, Jetta Gondal, in the role of an almond-eyed vamp born in China, who is a spy for the Spaniards.

From every standpoint it is a remarkably well-balanced production, high in interest and entertainment value, unusually artistic and one which takes rank with the year's finest pictures.

Story

Charles Abbott, a wealthy young American, is persuaded by his friend, Andres Escobar, to go to Cuba about 1850. He soon sees for himself the indignities of Spanish rule and joins the Cubans in their fight for independence. La Clavel, a Spanish dancer and a favorite with the Spaniards, is attracted to him. He learns that she, too, is in sympathy with the Cubans, and by assuming an air of a foolish fop he gains much important information. Captain Santicilla finally suspects the pair and lays a trap into which they fall. Confronting them, a struggle ensues and La Clavel is killed, but Abbott overcomes Santicilla. Abbott succeeds in saving some of his friends from the results of the trap laid for him, and his bravery causes another Spanish officer to offer to fight a duel with him so as to give him a chance for his life. Exhausted, he is unable to win, but a chivalrous whim causes the officer to place him aboard a ship bound for America, where he also finds Escobar's sister, with whom he has fallen in love.

"Bavu"

Universal-Jewel Production Is Unusually Thrilling and Exciting and Has Fine Cast and Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Even the most ardent devotee of thrills and excitement in screen entertainment should be thoroughly satisfied with the Universal-Jewel production, "Bavu," for it is just crammed full of these attributes. Coupled with this is the fact that the story is intensely interesting, has been finely produced with an excellent cast and there is a fascinating love story based on a popular angle.

Russia, in the throes of rebellion following the downfall of the Czar, is the unusual and exciting locale for the action, and against this background of intrigue and counter-intrigue is working out a triangular story of a princess of the old regime concerning the efforts of a subordinate member of her former household to save her from the clutches of an illiterate, selfish but forceful brute who has ridden to power in the social overthrow.

Starting off as a straight drama, the force and intensity of the action increases with the narrowing of the interest to the three principal players and the introduction of melodramatic situations, such as the use of revolving doors which allow characters to go out on one side unobserved while others are coming in. Some of the situations are rather gruesome; for example, the thrusting of a sword into a basket in which the hero is supposed to be hidden and the walling up of a room in which you also suspect the hero has taken refuge.

Adapted from a stage play, the director and those who prepared the script have given the production a remarkably smooth-running and consistent story for a picture of this type. The developments are logical even if they appear at times somewhat overdrawn, and there is an intensity of interest and suspense that rivets your attention. The sets are striking and appropriate and there are some exceptionally good scenes of the revolutionary mobs.

A cast of prominent players all give striking performances. Outstanding is the work of Wallace Beery as the brute in the title role, but of scarcely less distinction are the portrayals of Forrest Stanley as the hero, Estelle Taylor as the heroine and Sylvia Breamer as Bavu's sweetheart.

Despite the fact that there are certain sequences that could be tightened to probable advantage and some of the ending could be eliminated without injury, the picture as a whole is well out of the beaten path of usual screen offerings, furnishes unusually exciting and thrilling entertainment that should appeal to the majority of spectators and should prove a big box-office attraction.

Based on stage play of Earl Carroll.
Adapted by R. L. Shrock and A. G. Kenyon.
Directed by Stuart Paton.
Photographed by Allen Davey.
Length, 6,989 feet.

Story

The Russian revolution brings to the front in Kichinev an illiterate brute, "Bavu," who uses his power for selfish ends and through lies incites the populace to pillage the castle of Prince Markoff that he may obtain the prince's jewels. Mishka, a different type of man who counsels less violent methods, and who was formerly a subordinate member of the prince's household when he learned to admire the princess, seeks to save her. Secreting her in his rooms he runs afoul of Bavu. From that point the picture concerns the attempt of Bavu to secure the princess and make his getaway after disposing of Mishka and Mishka's fight to outwit Bavu in which he finally succeeds, ending in the declaration of love between the princess and the man who saved her.

"Man and Wife"

Good Cast Makes Arrow Picture Tell Interesting Story Convincingly

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

The triangle is as common in pictures as Hank's flivvers. But now and then along comes a quadrangle that, properly handled, furnishes interesting entertainment. And themes based on quadrangles are seemingly far from popular with directors who shun them whenever the opportunity presents. However, John L. McCutcheon took just such a theme and because of a hard-working veteran cast managed to furnish a picture that tells a convincing story. Good acting plus a little hokum in situations have added materially, certain scenes, when flashed before a New England audience of which the writer was a member, drawing tears from many near us.

To the gentleman or gentlemen who edited and cut the picture must go no little credit for the smooth way in which the story is unfolded. But the work of the individual players furnished the backbone of this picture. Director McCutcheon worked from his script, but his actors and actresses put life and soul into a piece that has pathos, with humor introduced at the proper moment. "Man and Wife" is not a big picture, but it is honest-to-goodness entertainment and a worth while program feature.

Robert Elliott, Norma Shearer and Gladys Leslie carry off the laurels with Ernest Hilliard, Edna May Spooner and Maurice Costello coming in for their share of credit.

Cast

Author not mentioned.
Directed by John L. McCutcheon.
Length, five reels.

Story

Dr. Howard Fleming, a noted physician and surgeon, who is confronted with a perplexing problem: He has married for a second time believing his first wife dead. Later on he learns that he has been grossly deceived by a trusted friend. His first wife is still alive. She returns and the startling discovery is made that she is his present wife's sister. But Fate finds a way and real love wins.

"The Madness of Youth"

Fox Production With John Gilbert Has Romantic Glamor That Will Please the Fans.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Fox's latest vehicle for John Gilbert is unusually strong in audience appeal. This promising young star has seldom been associated with material which suits him as well as this does. "The Madness of Youth" has that romantic glamor which accentuates his personality. It should go far in popularizing him.

As far as pleasing visible effects are concerned, the production is distinctly above average. In addition to the skill shown in featuring the good looks of the star, there is an alluring leading woman in Billie Dove and a scenic brilliance that will captivate the fans. A costume ball, conducted after the style of a winter carnival, is one of the big attractions. This includes a dance number exceptionally well done by Julianne Johnson. A softness in the photography adds charm to the scenes and in a few instances gets some effects that are rarely beautiful.

In its motivation, the picture is less perfect. The moods change abruptly, the emotional reactions lack naturalness at times, and the attempt to make things seem mysterious spoils the effect sometimes. Whether the chief character is a saint or a sinner could have been indicated at the start, as instead of provoking suspense it only causes confusion.

This does not prevent the production from promising to be a popular attraction. John Gilbert gives a charming performance. Billie Dove is pretty, wears some gay costumes and has some highly animated scenes which she handles cleverly. The remainder of the cast, too, shows fine directing.

Story

A young man, wholly bad, for a year has planned the robbery of a millionaire's collection of jewels. He poses as a religious fanatic. After successfully emerging from many difficult situations that at any moment threaten to bring about his immedaite arrest, he finally secures the famous jewels from the safe. But in the meanwhile he has fallen in love with his intended victim's lovely but wayward daughter. His career as a thief ends after her father shields him from the law.

"Vengeance of the Deep"

Thrilling Undersea Picture Distributed by American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Undersea thrills and a dramatic story provide entertainment that should please all the fans in this. Much of the action is staged under water with a constant effect of novelty that should interest those who like pictures that are out of the ordinary.

A story of intrigue showing the peculiar dangers to which a pearl diver is subjected furnishes some rather startling effects. The settings themselves, being the jungles of the deep, encourage suspense. The various dangers have been vividly pictured. A knot tied in the air tube cuts off the diver's supply of oxygen: at another time he loses his path and is rescued by grabbing hold of the anchor of a passing ship: the attack of a shark and the closing in of a giant clam are other sensations.

Additional points of appeal are the South Sea island settings and realistic atmosphere. The production is remarkably free from fake appearances, the types, native dances, etc., having that genuine character that appeals to the critical.

The director, A. B. Barringer, has shown great skill in handling material of this kind. Ralph Lewis is cast as a brutal sea captain which he portrays intelligently, handicapped somewhat by not being a perfect type for the part. Virginia Brown Faire is the picturesque heroine and Harmon McGregor and Van Mattimore distinguish themselves in under-water feats.

Story

Captain Musgrove is the brutal lord of a small South Sea island, excluding the natives from the pearl beds. His daughter, Ethel, is coveted by Frederico, a white diver, but the girl discerns in Jean, a beachcomber, the man of her choice. Musgrove runs down a pearl poacher who happens to be Tagu, the native chief's son. In revenge Tagu fouls the air pipe sustaining Frederico far below the surface and is attacked by a tiger shark but is rescued by Jean. Musgrove persuades Jean to test a new diving helmet and Frederico, his pride at stake, also risks his life and follows. They discover a treasure chest but decide to keep the secret from Musgrove. On their return that night the shell of a giant clam closes upon Jean and he is left by Fredrico to battle with what seems to be certain death. What further happens at the bottom of the ocean, as well as on shore, is replete with surprise.

"Temptation"

New C. B. C. Melodrama Best of "Big Six" Releases Thus Far—Replete with Tense Situations

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"Temptation" can justly be called a melodramatic special of tense situations. They are of the mutiple type. Just when you believe the problem solved some situation presents itself that alters the framework of the story completely. Ordinarily, such tactics have a tendency of complicating a theme; not so with "Temptation." Rather you enjoy these unexpected and novel twists, for they seemingly add to the melodramatic value of a piece that is founded on common sense and a theme that preaches the "more truth than poetry" theory.

Analyzed from the showman's viewpoint it is impossible for this writer to see where, properly exploited, this production can fall below your gross "net" for the week or whatever period you play pictures. There is ample exploitation material in the telltale title and all this is firmly upheld by the entertainment and production value of the picture itself. You have a diversion of settings, from humble village interiors to pretentious Park avenue mansions that fairly glitter with luxury. There are numerous well-handled crowd scenes, particularly the raid near the end of the picture, which is skillfully handled. It concerns the break of a "wet" roadhouse by the bluecoats. There is nothing that even borders anything the hardest-boiled censors can object to.

Photographically and directorially, the picture stands up strong. Our tip is to lose no time booking this production for it is high class—not high class enough to go over the head of a so-so audience, and not too frank to strike the sensitiveness of the elite. It is what we call a highlowbrow picture—everybody's picture. And a wow of a bet as a box office possibility.

The acting is splendid, particularly that of Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak. Phillips Smalley as the wealthy cynic unfolds a role that while not entirely new has a twist to it that makes it stand out refreshingly novel. June Elvidge, the nearest approach to a "heavy" role in the picture, is convincing.

Story.

Frederick Arnold, a broker, accepts a challenge to prove his contention that women "as a whole are mercenary." He selects Marjorie, wife of Jack Baldwin, a struggling clerk, for his horrible example. He meets Baldwin, shows him how to make money. In time Jack acquires wealth, while his wife spends. She falls in with a Bohemian and spendthrift set. Jack pleads vainly with his wife to change her ways. Meanwhile Arnold has fallen in love with Marjorie, but his plan to ruin the man he had made wealthy fails; instead, it increases Jack's wealth to the point where Baldwin becomes a slave of luxury and high living, only to be brought to his senses when he and his wife, caught in a raid on a "bottleg road house," escape together after having gone there with different companions and Fred Arnold has unmasked himself.

"Prodigal Daughters"

Gloria Swanson's Latest Paramount Feature Has Characteristic Brilliance.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Gloria Swanson's large following will find perfect satisfaction in her latest Paramount picture. It offers the same type of sparkling entertainment as her others, only to a more compelling degree than usual. As a production it is always delectable to the eye. The spirit is decidedly modern, at times ultra-modern and the movement is swift and spectacular.

The story itself is light in comparison with the appeal of the settings and general atmosphere. On the whole it is a frail protest against the modern standards of pleasure and serves mainly as an attractive vehicle for the sophisticated charm of the star. But however light the theme, the picture holds the interest and dazzles while it lasts.

It opens with a jazz party, that has a few colorful touches in which radio is introduced, and an effective flash-back to the primitive dances of the jungles. Interrupting this is a romantic aeroplane episode in which the storm effects are particularly good. Greenwich Village scenes later on, and a cafe raid add to the thrills.

Sam Wood has used his material to the decided advantage of the star and with regard for the tastes of those who are her greatest admirers. Besides a brilliance and dash, which the picture assuredly has, there are pleasing natural touches and on the whole, a freedom from the stereotyped. The star is stunning as usual. Her physical beauty is a great point of appeal and her wardrobe shows not only quantity and richness but good taste in selection. The scenes take her through varying degrees of fortune and she dresses appropriately. Her supporting cast is excellent and besides Theodore Roberts, includes Ralph Graves as the hero and Vera Reynolds in an interesting flapper role.

Story

The two ultra-modern daughters of J. D. Forbes leave home when he attempts to curb them in their mad race for pleasure. The oldest, "Swiftie," establishes a Greenwich Village apartment where freedom is the word. The younger marries a jazz song writer who soon deserts her. "Swiftie," deprived of her father's income, takes a job in a department store, but is fired after refusing to go out with the manager. A round of misfortunes and her sister's plight eventually bring her home where she finds forgiveness and romance.

"The Broken Violin"

An Arrow Picture With Big Thrill That Makes It a Good Audience Offering

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"The Broken Violin," which Atlantic Features, Inc., made for distribution through Arrow Film Corporation introduces a fearless and handsome young leading man, Reed Howes, from whom picture patrons of the country will no doubt hear considerable in the future, provided the right sort of director takes him in charge. Daring to the 'nth degree and with a personality that wins you from the outset, Howes carries himself through this feature so nobly that your attention is always focussed on his every move. He wins the picture completely. In fact, it is he and his daredevil, reckless acrobatic stunts on an aeroplane flying high in the air (and there is no double or dummy used) that furnishes "The Broken Violin" with its big punch thriller.

Then, too, Howes figures in three strenuously fierce fights of the give-and-take calibre that contribute materially to the melodramatic value of the picture. Next to Reed Howes, little Rita Rogan, a cute little baby, moves about so naturally babyishly you cannot help but give way to the impossible thought that she will step off the screen so that you can plant a kiss on her cheek. Joseph Blake as Jeremy Ellsworth, the grouchy millionaire, does splendidly in a difficult character role. Zena Keefe, Dorothy Mackaill, Warren Cooke, Henry Sedley, Gladden James and Sydney Dean also are in the cast.

The story, adapted for the screen by L. Case Russell, adapter of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and "Lost in a Big City," is a combination of crook and Northwest stuff, with good audience appeal.

Story

Jeremy Ellsworth, a millionaire, nearing the end of his days, consents to provide his will for his grandchildren, little Beatrice, and John Ellsworth, a foreman in a lumber camp. A crooked secretary withholds letters to the latter and in his place substitutes a pal who poses as the missing lad, until he is found out by the old gentleman, who dies from the shock. Meanwhile word reaches the real John Ellsworth of the presence of the masquerader in his granddad's home. He returns, only to be overpowered by ruffians who kidnap his baby sister. However, he escapes after a bitter hand-to-hand fight, overtakes the kidnapper with the use of a plane, and brings to justice the secretary and his crooks, incidentally winning a wife for himself.

'An Old Sweetheart of Mine'

Metro Releases Adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's Famous Poem

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

James Whitcomb Riley's poem is used to add a few embellishing touches to a well-known screen plot in this Metro release. In catching the spirit of the poem, the earlier scenes are by far the most successful. The latter part resorts to familiar melodrama. As the long-lasting appeal of this poem has rested in its highly romantic, idealistic strain, it seems that a screen version would be most pleasing if done entirely in this mood.

The incidents unfold as brought to life by a pipe-dream in the attic. As the hero, played by Elliott Dexter, recalls his childhood and youth one feels distinctly the sentiment of Riley's poem. This part is done in a pleasant, rambling style. There are some charming scenes with the children, played by Pat Moore and Mary Jane Irving, enlivened by a little humor now and then.

Elliott Dexter and Helen Jerome Eddy are good types for a performance of this kind. There is a sincerity and stability about them that brings home the significance of the picture and if the production had preserved more of the original romance of the poem, one can imagine that their performance would be quite perfect. As it is, the drama becomes somewhat ordinary as the usual plot of the swindlers is introduced. The climax, particularly, lacks originality. It shows how the fake schemes of the oil-stock promoters surprisingly result in favor of the investors, proving in a spectacular gushing of oil to be valuable after all.

On the whole it sums up as an average program attraction with a slightly added interest for those with whom the poem is a favorite

Story

John Craig, rummaging through an old trunk, is reminded of his first sweetheart. He recalls their childhood friendship and their later association in business when she aided him in defeating the schemes of oil swindlers who endangered the earnings of the townspeople; also how he was nearly persuaded to leave town by another woman who pretended to love him; but how the first sweetheart proved to be the real one. Then she comes into the room to interrupt his dreams, and he rouses himself to greet, as he says, "the living presence of that old sweetheart of mine."

Alice Adams

Booth Tarkington's Story Dramatically Told in Associated Exhibitors Feature.

Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett

"Alice Adams" was Booth Tarkington's prize story, and in the picture version they have retained all the charm of that story—and what is too seldom the case—followed the plot exactly.

This is a good deal of a character delineation and Florence Vidor has made Alice Adams very real and very appealing.

The story of a small town, it is simple in its telling and interesting in its unfolding. It is a story which might have happened right next door to anyone and because of this simplicity and the telling of the struggles of a poor family in a small town it will have a very strong appeal.

The cast has done excellent work in every instance. Florence Vidor is extremely pretty, she is very wistful in her longings for better things, she is charming as the daughter trying to keep peace in a most irrational family.

Claude Gillingwater gives another one of his inimitable character studies of an irascable old man. Margaret McWade also gives a splendid version of the nervous complaining wife whose whole life is wrapped up in her children, but still she makes life a burden for all of them. Vernon Steele as the lover will appeal to the young and romantic of the audience.

This is a picture which is above the ordinary in dramatic skill and in the delineation of character. There is an appeal which will be felt by all. It is a picture which will make a stronger appeal to the highbrow audience than it will to the average movie fan. They may think it is too much of a character study and not enough of the dramatic thrills which they crave.

It is a type of picture, however, which is a very great credit to the motion picture industry. The director has caught the spirit of Booth Tarkington, and the players have made those characters real for the screen.

Story

Alice Adams is outside the social pale in the small town in which she lives because her father is poor. She struggles vainly to keep up with the social set but is snubbed by everyone. Her father is sick most of the time and her mother constantly quarreling with him because he doesn't make more money. His brother is a loafer. At a dance at the Lamb's, the richest people in town, she is snubbed by everyone but Arthur Russell, a new man in town. He is much interested, comes to call often, but Alice thinks she has lost him when the mother invites him to dinner and everything goes wrong. Her father tries to start a glue factory in opposition to Lamb, is brought home with a stroke at the time her brother is accused of theft. Alice decides she must help the family, gives up all her social aspirations and starts to a business school. But Russell follows her and proves that trouble and poverty mean nothing to him.

"The Shriek of Araby"

Rollicking Mack Sennett Comedy Elaborately Featuring Ben Turpin Splendid Entertainment

Reviewed by W. E. Keefe

Mack Sennett has staged one of the best feature length comedies of the year in "The Shriek of Araby" for Allied Producers and Distributors Corp. Burlesque comedy, when well played is generally sure fire, and with Ben Turpin in the role of the "shriek," this picture burlesquing sheik films is bound to make a big hit.

Sennett has taken a desert background with a beautiful girl who is always being saved by Ben, as the desert hero, with white turban and flowing oriental trousers. The comedy is broad, and does not require much thought to follow the story, but nevertheless it is free from any taint of vulgarity, and is built up logically, and is corking good entertainment. Laugh follows laugh as Ben takes the sheik's place while the latter takes a day off to go fishing. There is a big laugh where Turpin, in the midst of the desert, has fresh milk and the morning newspaper delivered to his tent while he sits on the porch and fishes for brook trout.

After a ride on an ostrich, and winning two combats with villains, the shriek with the aid of a desert magician emerges victorious.

The picture has been beautifully and elaborately staged, with the desert scenes being especially sumptuous.

Director Jones has handled his people and built up his situations very well. Some of the titles are gems of wit and except for a few drags in the earlier part of the desert episodes, the story moves along splendidly.

Turpin is immense as the shriek and has never done better work. Kathryn McGuire's characterization is faultless. She has charm, beauty, and personality. The work of the entire supporting cast is good.

Ben is passing out handbills for a sheik show in a picture house where a handsome Arab is riding a horse as a ballyhoo. The Arab proves such a hit that the audience won't go into the theatre. The manager fires the Arab and gives Ben his job. Ben is next seen on a boat where he meets the girl and gets into all sorts of scrapes. He is thrown overboard and lands on a desert island. The Arab he befriended is the sheik, and when he goes on a vacation he gives Ben his place. Ben again meets the girl and saves her from the villain and rides triumphantly away. He is rudely awakened by a traffic cop and finds that it has all been a dream.

"Playing It Wild"

Vitagraph Western with Several Humorous Situations Affords Good Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Vitagraph's newest production, starring William Duncan and Edith Johnson, is a Western which affords good entertainment. This is due principally to the manner in which the subject has been handled rather than to the underlying theme, which is a conventional one, involving the winning of a political fight by a stranger, who suddenly finds himself the owner of the town paper.

There is considerable clever humor in this picture, and several of the situations, where the hero adopts the ruse of appearing as a particularly ferocious bandit and puts it all over the sheriff he hopes to prevent being re-elected, making him the subject of ridicule, are played so broadly that at times you wonder whether Duncan himself, who directed the picture, is not burlesquing the situations a bit. Particularly is this true of the bandit sequences and the speeches of the bandit, which are in ultra-heroic and boasting style.

At any rate, this portion of the picture is bright and will afford the average spectator a lot of fun and amusement, and the scene where the bold, bad bandit, "Terrible Terry," pulls the nose of the sheriff and places in his hand a rubber pistol, will bring a good laugh from almost any one.

The opening scenes could possibly be shortened to advantage, as they do not have any very direct bearing on the story proper, as there is a big switch in the action to a different locale and a new set of characters with the exception of the hero.

The picture has been well produced, and whether you consider it as straight Western melodrama, at times overplayed for the sake of the comedy, or if you consider it as bordering on burlesque, you will enjoy it just the same.

William Duncan is effective in the leading role and Edith Johnson is entirely adequate as the girl. Francis Powers, Dick LaReno, Edmund Cobb and Frank Beal are all well-selected types. As to Frank Weed as the man who is elected sheriff, he is not as large or as forceful looking as the other players, and hardly seems to be the type to inspire such awe in the mind of the bandit, but he fits in with the comedy element of the subject.

Story

Jerry Hoskins, fired continually from ranches on which he works, because of his happy-go-lucky way of doing things and disregard of the consequences, moves on to another town. Getting into a poker game, he ends up winning the town newspaper. This plunges him into the thick of a fight over the election of a new sheriff. Not being a writer, he arranges with the former editor to handle the fight and falls in love with the editor's daughter. The campaign threatens to flop and he hits on the idea of masquerading as an awful bandit, "Terrible Terry." The plan works out fine, the sheriff becomes the subject of ridicule and the right man is elected. He then exposes the ruse and all ends happily with his winning the girl from his rival, who is the former sheriff's son.

"East Side West Side"

Principal Pictures Corporation Can Well Be Proud of This Clever Irving Cummings Special

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

In this Irving Cummings special, based on the Broadway play of the same name, one obtains a splendid example of the progress of the independent production. Every care was taken in the production of this picture which tells a story fascinatingly and convincingly. It is far superior in every detail to its stage interpretation, considerably more romantic and moves at a clip that leaves nothing to be desired. This writer cannot recall a single picture that Irving Cummings has made that is better than "East Side West Side." It's one of the little gems of the season and should do a whale of a business, first because of the popularity of the theme and locale of the story and secondly because it is a very good production, entertaining and interesting throughout.

"East Side West Side," a "veritable cross-section of the world," as one of the introductory titles so aptly puts it, cannot help make money for exhibitors. This year has brought a seemingly endless stream of pictures having New York life for its background, but this is the best of the lot. There is real life in this one. There are human people, people you meet on New York's streets every day. There is the reckless, pleasure seeking lassie willing to sacrifice her all for a taste of luxury, a victim of the white plague, a "little mother," a philanthropic doctor, a young author—all types that fascinate, that grip and combine to make one of the best stories this writer has seen reflected on the silver sheet.

"East Side West Side" is any audience's picture, because it has a heart that beats naturally, because its people, its background, its everything are true to life. The exploitation it invites is unlimited with possibilities. And one cannot exploit this special too heavily, for here is one picture you should spread on to the limit, for it is superlative entertainment.

Aside from the excellence of the story, its satisfactory direction and consistent settings —always appropriate no matter whether they be on the East Side or on Riverside Drive—there is an all star cast that reads like one of those player lineups so heavily advertsed in so-called "million dollar productions." There is Kenneth Harlan as the neurotic, but serious and ambitious amateur author who is a complete success and wins over his audience with a portrayal of an anything but simple character that is pleasing. Eileen Percy as Lory, Maxine Elliot Hicks, Lucille Hutton as Eunice and Betty May as Amy Van Norman satisfy. Lucille Ward, Charles Mailes and Wally Van are in the supporting cast, too.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

Hits and Bits of the Passing Week

Booking Dates
Salesmanship
Propaganda Afloat
The Challenge
Bunk and Facts
Quality Pictures
The Winning Way

BY ROGER FERRI

NOW is the time, Mr. Independent Producer and Distributor, to make known your offerings during 1923-24. Remember, your competitors are selling NOW for next season. Exhibitors will start booking in June. Now is the time to submit to them your lineup for next season. Profit by the sad experience of the past. Don't wait until the exhibitors' books have been clogged. If you contemplate first run dates, you must start selling the first run exhibitor now—not next August or September, for by then he will have booked his early season's dates. Sell now, Mr. Independent. Take a tip from the big independent distributors. They are not waiting until it is too late. They are planning now for next season. What have you done? The exhibitor is shopping now. And now is the the time to submit your wares to him.

NOT until distributors realize the absolute importance of independent producers and encourage the latter by furnishing booking reports and the like on time will the former prosper to the extent that they should. While there is considerable production afoot at present both on the West Coast and in New York, the fact remains that the treatment most independent producers have received this year at the hands of certain distributors has been anything but commendable and fair. The latter have made some progress—but not enough progress in the right direction. True, their gross receipts must have shown an increase this season. But what encouragement has the independent producer received? Very little. He has seen independent picture bookings multiply, he has read in trade papers where his picture has been sold 100 per cent., but that has been virtually all. Money has been coming in slowly and irregularly; many have been forced to threaten legal action before being given any consideration.

WE would like to see a better treatment of the independent producer. Without him and his pictures we would have nothing to sell. He has his bankers to satisfy. He has obligations outstanding that demand immediate attention of inquiries he makes of his distributors and, yet, we have been in certain offices when such communications have arrived only to see the recipient read them carelessly and inconsiderately relegate them to the waste basket. That is unfair, let alone unbusinesslike. Yet, it is not an uncommon practice among a class of distributors that we sincerely hope will not be in our midst next season. Probably we will step on the toes of a few, but we don't mind a little thing like that, for our own weight is not so enormous that it can do real serious damage. But we do maintain that this type of distributor—and they are the ones who offer no guarantees but dabble in pictures as some promoters dabble in worthless oil stock—is a detriment—a menace to the business.

THIS department has received no few complaints from independent producers and we have strained every effort to co-operate with them in the interests of fair play. Fortunately, our efforts in a majority of cases have proved successful. Independent producers seeking distributors can always call upon us. We are prepared to aid independent producers in getting proper distribution of their product, provided that product is of the meritorious sort. We will gladly advise producers as to the status of distributors. This is but a part of the service this department renders to its readers. There must be co-operative action in ridding the market of these delinquent operatives and we are prepared at all times to do our share to the very best of our ability. The independent market is confronted with too fine a future to allow these persons to continue their questionable operations. And we purpose to keep on hammering at them until they are actually on the outside looking in.

THE anti-independent propagandists are on the job and unless something is done immediately to offset this very pronounced movement it will be difficult to say just what may happen. This writer had an experience that emphasized the extent of the determination imbedded in those who are actively involved in this campaign. We were called by an official of a certain concern who offered us a position, claiming that "sticking along with independents would get us nowhere and that nothing that would be or could be done would or could help the anti-independent feeling that is certain to be developed."

Well, frankly we have never worked for a better concern than the Chalmers Publishing Company. We are 100 per cent. satisfied. Several weeks ago we said we would not change the companionship of this organization for a place on any President's cabinet. And we meant it. A real organization—the best of its kind in the world—and we're glad and feel proud to be on the Chalmers lineup. So much for that.

AS far as independents are concerned, we believe in them and we fail to agree with our good friend in his contentions. Either he was ignorant of trade conditions or he was deliberately misrepresenting a prevalent siturtion. Our position in the independent market is distinctly journalistic. We fail to see any backward trend in the market; in fact, it has forged ahead marvelously. Independents are a stronger and more powerful faction of the picture business than ever before.

We are releasing bigger and better pictures. The trend is forward absolutely. New blood is reinforcing the field. New faces and reliable box office names plus good stories incorporated in quality productions are elevating the independent market to a level where it is the envy of many, who would find much consolation and sleep better if it were completely eliminated.

BUT—the time for action is here. Independents must fight. War has been declared. There is room in any industry for manufacturers of meritorious product—and the picture industry is no exception. The next three years will bring many important, and some, radical, changes. But the independent producer and distributor is in the field to remain. But he has been challenged. And the defi must not be ignored.

We can, will—and must win. Our most powerful weapon must be in the form of good money-making pictures. But before taking another step we must clean houses, we must do away with our enemies within the market.

We must push out the insincere, inefficient, extravagant and get-rich-quick type.

THERE must be a thorough house-cleaning during the next few months. Local conditions in exchange centres must adjust themselves. Distributors must fortify themselves so that any emergency can be fully met. Producers must continue making better pictures. There must be more exhibitor co-operation.

Cut out the superlatives and flattery. Get down to brass tacks. Remember that we are on trial. They say the independents' fight is hopeless. That is a gross misrepresentation, for independents are stronger today than they ever were. Exhibitors have come to a realization of the importance of independent producers and are booking his pictures.

There is propaganda in circulation tending to show the reverse situation. Combat it now. Combat it with good pictures sold on an equitable basis, a basis that will make a reasonable profit for everybody involved.

HARRY DAVIS of Pittsburgh is a thorough showman. That's why he has grown to be the important theatre owner he is in Western Pennsylvania. This week at the third annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania, in Pittsburgh, he pointed out the advantages and disadvantages of exploitation. He said there is no reason why an exhibitor should exploit a poor or mediocre picture as extensively as a big production. "Never oversell your patrons," he counseled.

And a wise advice it is, too.

Independent exchangemen and exhibitors will do well to remember that sound suggestion.

The days when "circusing" a town brought crowds are gone, never to return. Today people go shopping for their entertainment just as they shop for wearing apparel.

Remember that.

Baum Survey Emphasizes Good Condition of Market

Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporaeion, returned to New York after a business trip of six weeks, in which time he has covered practically every state in the Union and actually did cover every important film center. Although the nature of his trip was truly a sales campaign on Equity's latest production, "Has the World Gone Mad?" still Mr. Baum devoted considerable time to a survey of the motion picture field in general. Here are some of the cardinal facts that he relates as having been most prominent indications from his personal observations:

1—Business is booming in almost every state in the Union and especially in the steel territory of Pennsylvania, the coal mining districts of Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky and in the farming districts of Minnesota, Kansas and Missouri.

2—Optimism has taken the place of pessimism and everywhere there are signs of better times coming and bigger business as the year progresses.

3—Exchange centers and exchange men report a better demand for pictures of the better class, while mediocre productions are entirely neglected.

4—Independent distributors are beginning to meet "the advance selling campaigns" as inaugurated by the national producers and distributors by having a specific number of unreleased pictures in their exchange, for screening purposes, to be released at the same time as the national distributors launch their product—in the fall of the year.

5—Easier monetary conditions in every part of the country and the willingness of the distributors to buy good product at equitable prices.

6—The influx of new concerns in every branch of the film business, which will tend to make for keen competition but at the same time create a wider field of discrimination between the companies turning out good products and the companies operating in "factory made pictures."

"I was really surprised at the vast improvement, plainly evident in the motion picture industry, all within the past six months. Just about six months ago I made the same trip and at that time was rather depressed over the uncertain outlook. Not so now. Everywhere signs of prosperity and signs of boom days are apparent; factories and industries of all kinds are working to capacity; wages are increasing in many of the places; people are buying now what they have been forced to sacrifice during the bad days of 1920, 1921 and the first half of 1922; the people are naturally seeking amusements and diversion, now that the sky looks bright—everywhere there seems to be a spirit of optimism and hope for better things prevailing."

Arrow Special Shown at Ten Dollar Price

PHILADELPHIA—(Special)—About twenty stars journeyed to this city Tuesday evening to attend a special showing of Arrow's picture, "Night Life in Hollywood," held in the Grand Ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. The showing was held in conjunction with a charity ball given under the auspices of the National Stomach Hospital and Tony Luchese, Oscar Neufeld and Exploitation Manager Bill Haggerty of De Luxe Film Exchange officiated. It was one of the most gala affairs held in Philadelphia this year, local society turning out en masse to contribute generously.

Arrangements for the affair were under way for some time, tickets for the showing and dance being sold at ten dollars each. J. Charles Davis, exploitation and publicity director of Arrow Film Corporation, headed the party of stars who came from New York in a special train. Among the stars who made the trip were Zena Keefe, Doris Kenyon, May Collins, Mary Thurman, Lionel Barrymore, John Lowell, L. Case Russell, Evangeline Russell, Charles Beyer, Martha Mansfield, Reed Howes, Maurice Costello and many others.

The Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia, one of the strongest Stanley Circuit houses, can do $26,000 a week.

Through an arrangement made with Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation of that city the next two Warner pictures, "Brass" and "Main Street" will play that house. This is quite a boost for Warner product in that the Stanley with its exchange interests has been giving its own features the right of way and using outside stuff only when absolutely necessary. However, with "Brass" and "Main Street" the arrangement is different, for bookings are being switched to allow those productions to come in.

There has been so much money extravagantly spent in the better New England towns on the exploitation of mediocre and cheap stuff that the public there is seemingly indifferent to the advertising stunts being pulled to attract business. The exhibitors have themselves to blame. A year ago they did no special exploitation of any consequence. But within the year they have oversold the public and are now suffering a kickback, for a splash on a worthwhile attraction means nothing.

Reports from exchange centres indicate a big jump in the matter of independent picture bookings since the Easter holiday. Particularly good has been the improvement in the middlewest and the coast, which sections were a trifle off during the winter.

Block booking of independent pictures will be quite the thing next season if independent exchanges have their way, for judging from announcements made so far for 1923-24, most of the big independent distributors will sell series productions in block fashion.

"Lost in a Big City," the Arrow special, starring John Lowell, did a splendid business at the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I., last week, the last three days of the week's engagement being as big as the first three, with some three hundred turned away at the last show Saturday night.

From True Thompson comes word to C. C. Burr, of Mastodon Films, Inc., that "Sure-Fire Flint," the second Johnny Hines feature, had broken all records at the Capitol Theatre in Dallas, Tex., last week.

"Brass" is turning in the biggest rental gross of any picture handled by Franklin Film Exchange in Boston, according to word received from that city this week. The Warner special is "catching on" remarkably in the New England territory.

Because of the differences that have arisen between Warner Brothers and Balaban & Katz, of Chicago, the Loop premiere showings of the former's product is being held up. Just what the status of the case is at present neither side has cared to say.

Business in the South continues to improve, despite the fact that about this time of the year the takings begin to slop. However, no such condition is prevalent now if the reports brought North by southerners can be taken seriously.

David Starkman, of Philadelphia, on Friday of this week showed the Weiss Brothers' special, "After Six Days," to a representative audience of educators and clergymen at the Y. M. C. A. in that city. A number of guests from New York were in attendance.

Improve Closeup with New Device

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—A third camera, equipped with a wide-focus, specially-built telescopic lens, set up on a long-legged tripod, for the purpose of "shooting" close-ups of screen players simultaneously with medium long-range action, has been perfected by Richard Thomas, the young producer-director, who is filming "Other Men's Money" at the Hollywood Studios.

According to Mr. Thomas, he has met with a greater degree of success than he anticipated. The device used, which is attached to an ordinary motion picture camera, is the result of several months' work of Mr. Thomas and his cinematographer, Jack Fuqua.

Books Hines' Film

Harry Crandall has booked Johnny Hines in "Sure Fire Flint" for his Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, for the week of April 29th.

New Englanders Shop Early, Report Boston Exchanges

BOSTON—(Special)—New England first run exhibitors are no longer remaining away from independent exchanges, for already many of them are scouring the independent branches seeking a line of pictures for next season. New Englanders are shopping early for next season. Never before in the history of local film business was there such a big demand for next year's product as there is seemingly existing at present.

Indications point that Franklin Film Corporation next season will be the biggest independent distributor in this territory. According to William Shapiro, his exchange will have available something like 30 pictures of the higher type next year. Eighteen of these pictures will come from Warner Brothers. Eight he will get from Truart Films, Inc., and twelve from Principal Pictures Corporation.

His overhead expenses for next season will be twice what they are today. However, Mr. Shapiro is enthusiastic and believes that with the product he has lined up for next year, he will do a record business. He plans on increasing his organization during the summer months.

"Luck," Johnny Hines' latest picture, bids fair to greatly exceed the gross rentals scored by his other two pictures, "Burn 'Em Up, Barnes" and "Sure Fire Flint," both of which have been handled by Sam Moscow, who is also releasing his latest picture.

W. Ray Johnston, Vice-President of Arrow Film Corporation, was in Boston last week, as was Abe Levey of the same organization. They spent two days on Film Row. They came up from Providence, R. I., where they attended the showing of "Lost in a Big City."

William Mahoney of the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I., was so pleased with the showing Arrow product has made at his house that he has booked "Jacqueline" or "Blazing Barriers" for the week of April 30. The date was originally set for April 23, but because of local conditions the date was switched.

While rumors have been afloat for some time here regarding the production plans of Sam Grand and Harry Ascher, nothing of a definite nature has been developed, although their Coast trip last month was considered very significant and pertained to their production plans.

Sam Grand and William Shapiro, local exchangemen, made trips to New York on business last week.

Bill McConnville reports an unexpectedly huge business on Arrow's "Streets of New York" in this territory. Reports from houses hereabouts are particularly good on this feature.

Juanita Hansen, the former star whose drug stories have been appearing in the Boston American, a local Hearst paper, is playing in Boston this week. There is some talk among certain exchangemen about reviving her pictures.

Mrs. Lewis Praises Warner's "Brass"

An unsolicited testimonial, substantiating, as it does, the consensus of approval that is being accorded the Warner Brothers' classic of the screen, "Brass," a Harry Rapf production, is reported to have been received from Mrs Sinclair Lewis, wife of the author of "Main Street," which was recently completed at the Warner Coast studios.

In a brief but pointed letter, Mrs. Lewis, writing from Hartford, Conn., says: "Last night I watched 'Brass' with the critical eyes of the wife of the author of 'Main Street.' If the Warner Brothers adaptation of my husband's novel is as understanding, as appealing, as human, as well cast and as genuinely entertaining as 'Brass,' I shall be delighted."

"Temptation" Gets Off to Flying Start in Philly

PHILADELPHIA—(Special)—"Temptation," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation special, starring Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak, went over the top this week and proved true the good things predicted for it at its world premiere showing at the Carlton Theatre, one of the Stanley houses. "Temptation" opened there on Saturday to tremendous crowds. Newspaper notices the following day were satisfactory.

The opening was negotiated in record time, officials of the Stanley Company having viewed the picture at Tony Luchese and Oscar Nuefeld's De Luxe Film Exchange projection room only the week previous. A print was brought here by a special C. B. C. representative. Immediately following the showing it was decided to open the picture at the Carlton the following week.

So enthusiastic was the Stanley management that instead of opening the week at 12:01 (after Sunday midnight) Monday morning, "Temptation" was opened on Saturday, thus getting the benefit of the full week-end business, which was capacity at every show.

Owing to the rush in booking, very little time was had for exploiting the picture. Bill Haggerty, the De Luxe exploitation man, got busy immediately and saw that the city was well covered with papers, for it was impossible to work stunts in that short time. He also concentrated on attractive newspaper advertising.

The newspaper criticisms were good. The Inquirer said: "'Temptation' was interesting and an unusual picture," while the Bulletin said the "cast deserves to be called all-star. Bryant Washburn does especially fine work and the other members are sincere and convincing." The Record reviewer said: "It is full of real meat, with plenty of strong situations logically woven. It makes you think and grips the imagination." The North American was particularly enthusiastic over the work of Bryant Washburn and said of the story that "it is convincing and based on a theme that is rich where it should be rich, meager where it should be meager. As interesting a picture as we have seen."

The Evening Ledger said: "This is more than 'just a picture.' It is a good picture, one that stands out from the mass and draws attention to itself by simplicity, convincing qualities, fine acting, a logical, interestng story, excellent production. Audiences appreciated it. Here's hoping they continue to show their good sense in doing so."

Fisher to Make Three Yearly with Virginia Lee Corbin Starred

Following weeks of quiet organization and planning, announcement was made this week of the formation of Fisher Productions, which plans to enter the independent ranks of producers in a big way. Without loss of time the new concern engaged studio space at the Hollywood studios and commenced the assembly of a technical force and a cast for their first production.

Virginia Lee Corbin, child star of a score of noted photoplays, has been signed to be featured in the first production. A cast of noted players, each a star in his or her own right, is being rapidly assembled.

Three productions a year are announced. Motion picture men of long experience will be at the helm of the concern. The officers are: Aaron L. Jaffe, prominent San Francisco manufacturer, president; S. L. Blake, formerly affiliated with the Anglo-California Trust Co. of San Francisco, secretary, and Victor B. Fisher, treasurer.

Truart Selling on Franchise Basis

Announcement was made this week by Truart Film Corporation that it will sell its product on a franchise basis to independent exchanges. Truart is distributing the Burton King special, "The Empty Cradle," starring Mary Alden and Harry Morey; the Elaine Hammerstein series and a number of others. Gene Marcus of Twentieth Century Film Corporation of Philadelphia has purchased the Truart product for his territory.

Burr Signs Doris Kenyon

Charles Burr was this week reported to have signed Doris Kenyon, star of many of his pictures, under a long term contract. Miss Kenyon has been signed for an important role in "Bright Lights of Broadway," a Bennie Zeidman picture which Principal Pictures Corporation will handle.

A. Carlos to Make "Unknown Purple"

Following the consummation of their arrangement with Truart Pictures, through M. H. Hoffman, general manager, A. Carlos, head of the producing unit to be known as Carlos Productions, Inc., and Roland West, director, are preparing to start work immediately upon the filming of "The Unknown Purple."

This was a tremendously successful stage play, running for two years in New York, written by Mr. West. Helen MacKellar and Richard Bennett played the leading roles upon the stage. It has as its basic idea a weird, mysterious theme that is splendidly adapted for motion picture production, one whose full possibilities will be realized by the author-director in transcribing it to the screen. The cast that is being assembled to enact this unusual photoplay will contain names that will make it a decided attraction for the independent market.

Big Demand for Bernhardt Films; Foreign Trade News

Sarah Bernhardt's recent death has brought about a whole revival of pictures in which that great tragedienne was starred in France, according to advices from Paris received this week. The French Government has taken a hand in the matter by offering a monetary prize to the film man or concern presenting the most acceptable pictures in which Mme. Bernhardt appears. Just before she died Mme. Bernhardt played the part of a paralyzed clairvoyant in a film taken at her home by an American company. Mme. Bernhardt's work in the picture was completed two days before she died. She merely appears in about 2,000 feet of the picture, which will be completed in this country. The identity of the company which succeeded in taking the picture has not been divulged, however, although rumors have connected virtually all the big companies.

As a means of encouraging the production of big French pictures in France, the French Government, according to a letter received this week, has been asked to select a committee to award certificates annually to films that are deserving of special merit. There is at present a prize of 5,000 francs for the best picture made in France. Madame Virginia de Castro, the Portuguese novelist, is offering this price. The 1922 prize went to M. Leon Poirer's "Jocelyn," which Gaumont handled.

A special film touching on the life of Pasteur has been made in France to commemorate the centenary anniversary of that famous character. There is said to be nothing dramatic about this film; instead it is a biographical affair. M. Jeane Epstein produced the picture.

According to statistics compiled abroad one-fifth of the pictures shown in Paris during the month of February were French-made. The other four-fifths were chiefly made in America.

Rene Navarra is to film "Ferragus," a screen adaptation of a Balzac novel. The scenes are laid in Paris in the year 1830.

Louis Mercanton, a French producer, is to make "The Affair of the Queen's Necklace," on the other side. It deals with an episode in the life Marie Antoinette.

At Lichtman's "Are You a Failure?" received splendid notices from the trade and newspaper critics in London, according to clippings that have reached this desk.

David Mountan, foreign manager of Arrow Film Corporation, said the foreign market never seemed so bright, particularly for independent productions. He has closed several sales this week.

Mexico is seeking all the independent product this country seemingly can furnish. Opposing companies are leading a lively competitive bidding match for the product.

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN

Star, who will be starred in series of four pictures for Truart Film Corporation

Roubert Selling "For You My Boy" on Conservative $75,000 Basis

"For You My Boy," a William L. Roubert production, dwelling on the father love theme, has been finally cut and edited and is now ready for distribution through independent exchanges, according to announcement made this week. The father love theme has apparently struck a popular chord for several pictures of that type have proven heavy money-makers during the past few months. A unique feature of this picture is found in the fact that the producer made no attempt to inject a girl and boy romance into the story, ignoring that entirely. The picture is reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

According to Mr. Roubert his firm is now prepared to do business with independent exchanges and the valuation on the picture has been fixed on a $75,000 basis, which is conservative for "For You My Boy" is a splendid showman's picture with excellent exploitation possibilities.

"Sherlock Holmes" Author Testifies

Independent film men in general are interested in the suit that William Gillette and Charles Frohman, Inc., of New York have brought against the Stoll Films, Ltd., of England, and Educational Exchanges over the series of Sherlock Holmes pictures. Considerable controversy has been aroused over these pictures. First a strife developed between Alexander Film Corporation and Educational and exchanges that had purchased a series of 15 Sherlock Holmes from Alexander, but this affair was settled.

However, in this latest suit, Justice M. O'Malley, of the New York Supreme Court, has granted an application of the plaintiffs to take the testimony of Sir Conan Doyle, author of the Sherlock Holmes stories, who is now in this country. Saturday last was the examination day. The defendants, too, sought the testimony of the author, claiming that through it they could prove that while Doyle gave Stoll permission to use his stories for the screen in 1920, he did not give any such rights to the plaintiffs. Gillette, some years ago, starred in a stage play called, "Sherlock Holmes."

Frank G. Hall has applied in the New York Supreme Court for an injunction restraining the Penn Export & Import Company from prosecuting a suit against him for $167,500 on his endorsement of notes for that sum made by Hall Mark Pictures. He alleges that he agreed to settle for $15,000 by the payment of $2,000 in cash and $250 a week from his salary payable by the State Theatres Corporation, until $13,000 was paid, and that the last payment was made December 21. He has demanded that the suit be dropped and the notes cancelled, but says that the Penn company has retained a new attorney and is threatening to enter judgment against him by default for the full amount sued for.

Alvin Wortham has obtained an attachment in the New York Supreme Court against the property of Hartil C. Triwedi, a barrister of Bombay, India, who came here to dispose of the film, "Veiled Faces," on the ground that the sum is due him under an agreement by which he was to get 10 per cent. of what the defendant received from Vitagraph for the film. Wortham alleges that it was sold for $90,000, and that the amount due the plaintiff was $7,140, but $4,090 is still unpaid. He asked for the attachment on the ground that Triwedi, who is at 1600 Broadway, has said he intended to return to Bombay.

Harry Y. Romayne, president of the Romayne Super Film Company, who was held on charges of grand larceny and embezzlement, has been exonerated in Los Angeles. The charges arose out of a disagreement among the trustees of the Cinema Dist. Corporation, over the alleged purchase of a film from Romayne, who was a director of Cinema Distributing.

Suit has been filed in the Supreme Court by William Matthews against the Whaling Film Corporation for $9,900 alleged to be due for legal services, and application for an attachment was asked because the defendant is a Massachusetts corporation. Matthews said that after the Motion Picture Commission of New York had refused to grant a license to "Down to the Sea in Ships" unless the defendant eliminated some of the scenes he was engaged to ask a rehearing on the ground that the picture had cost $200,000 and an offer of $500,000 had been received for it, and its value would depend on the reception it received in New York. The plaintiff says he induced the commission to reverse its ruling, and because of the importance of that action, he believes the services were worth what he charges.

Arrow Closes Big Film Sale

W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, announces the consummation of a deal with the Progress Pictures Company of Pittsburgh, whereby that concern acquires a number of Arrow's greatest releases.

The deal, which was negotiated by P. W. Hamilton and Harry C. Simeral, representing the Progress Pictures Company of Pittsburgh, and W. Ray Johnston of Arrow, gives Progress Pictures the following product for Eastern Pennsylvania and West Virginia: "The Little Red Schoolhouse," a Martin J. Heyl production with Martha Mansfield, E. K. Lincoln, Sheldon Lewis, Edmund Breese, Paul Everton and Harlan Knight; "The Rip Tide," an A. B. Maescher production with Stuart Holmes, Rosemary Theby, Russell Simpson, J. Frank Glendon, George Rigas and Diana Alden: "Man and Wife," an Effanem production with Gladys Leslie, Robert Elliott, Maurice Costello and Norma Shearer; "None So Blind," a Burton King production with Dore Davidson, Zena Keefe, Maurice Costello and Gene Burnell; and "The Broken Violin," an Atlantic Features production with Reed Howes, Zena Keefe, Dorothy Mackaill, Rita Rogan, Gladden James, Henry Sedley and Jack Richardson.

Kathlene Martyn is the latest stage sattelite to be signed by C. C. Burr. Miss Martyn, together with Raymond McKee, Charlie Murray and Russell Griffin, will form the nucleus of a permanent stock company with headquarters at the Glendale, L. I. studios of the Burr organization. As soon as Mr. Burr returns from the South several other well-known players will be added to this list, the company when completed to be of all-star calibre.

"Luck," the latest of the Johnny Hines melo-comedies, has been received with enthusiasm by the critics of the motion picture trade journals. All the reviewers are as one in their praise of this latest C. C. Burr production, claiming that it surpasses all of Johnny's previous efforts, and that's going some.

Five-year-old Russell Griffin, the young star discovered by C. C. Burr, is now being much sought after by artists who want him to pose. Russell is not strong for the idea, he is so active that he hates to stand still long enough for any one to even make a sketch of him.

Charlie Murray is having a tough time writing his memoirs. There are lots of things he'd like to tell about but Mrs. Murray is "reading copy" for him and that makes it a bit hard for Charlie.

"Ham and Yeggs" is the title of the next release of the Hallroom Boys Comedy series of two-reelers which are being handled through independent exchanges.

The Standard Film Service of Detroit, of Which Jess Fishman is manager, has acquired the Michigan rights to "Only a Shopgirl," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation picture.

Albert Dorris, for years with the Coast Universal forces, is editor of the new production news and review research department established by Richard Thomas, who is making "The Silent Accuser."

Philly 'Changes Keep on Jump

PHILADELPHIA — (Staff Special) —A private showing for the mayor, newspaper men, heads of the city and religious organizations, and the faculty of Lafayette College at Easton, Pa., was given by the Royal Pictures, Inc., 1337 Vine street, for the exhibitors of Northumberland County last Sunday under the direction of Tom Bible in Easton, of the picture "Why Women Re-marry," which the firm just purchased.

Benjamin Glatz, booker for the Royal Company, is the proud father of a new boy, Benjamin, Jr., who made his debut last week.

Fifteen members of the Philadelphia Exchange Colony congregated at the DeLuxe Film Company's headquarters on Sunday and motored from there to Eagleville to participate in the Mastbaum memorial services. The members of the Local Arbitration Board, headed by Oscar Neufeld, accompanied the exchangemen.

A committee made up of seven judges from the various courts in Philadelphia, representatives of the Secret Service Department of the Narcotic Squad, Washington, D. C., and representatives of the leading Philadelphia civic and religious organizations were present at a private exhibition of the drug picture, "The Greatest Menace," in the DeLuxe Film Company's headquarters on Saturday of last week. On Friday prominent society and club women were witnesses of the showing, all gave approval of the film as an instructive and interesting production.

A meeting of the co-operative ball committees of the Exchange and Exhibitors Association will be held next week for the purpose of arranging final plans for the big ball to be held in Atlantic City. It will be under the direction of President Oscar Neufeld, of the Exchangemen's Association. Bob Lynch, of the Metro, Incorporated, has been appointed chairman of a committee to secure moving picture stars for the ball.

Will Nigh Wrote Story for "Marriage and Morals," Says North in Denying Report

The report that the story of Will Nigh's second production for L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North was written by a short-story writer of note in American fiction was discounted this week, when Will Nigh disclosed the fact that he himself was the author of the script which he is now working on. The story Nigh was believed to be using has been reserved by him for a future production. It happened that a few days after the director bought the story, he conceived of a better one himself—one that he thought more timely.

Will Nigh therefore again appears as author of the picture he is directing. This maintains his usual practise of personally writing all themes of the features he stages and directs. In addition to his role of author-director, Nigh will also carry the honors of titling his production. This has been his custom since he began directing. The independent director is known for his concise, punchy sub-titles, as well as for pithy humor. This has been convincingly displayed in "Notoriety" and all his former successes. Believing that sub-titling is one-third of the picture, he takes care of that job himself.

Six Big Specials From Burr 1923-24

If the plans on which C. C. Burr of Mastodon Films, Inc., is now known to be working materialize that firm's contributions to the independent market in 1923-24 will be even more pretentious than its "Big Six" program of the current season. Just what specials Mr. Burr is planning to make is problematical at this time, although he is considering the adaptation to the screen of a number of popular stories which he and his staff are now carefully reading.

That C. C. Burr intends to make all-star productions—pictures wherein box office names are prominent—is also indicated in the offers he has been known to have made a number of stars. He already has purchased the rights to three stories and these will be included among his first releases.

B. P. Fineman Starts Extensive Production Plans on West Coast; News of Independent Studio Folk

LOS ANGELES — (Special)—With House Peters in the leading role, supported by Rubye de Remer and a cast of well known artists, B. P. Fineman's production, "Don't Marry for Money," his first since his return from the East, is well under way. The company is occupying the studio of Principal Pictures, leased by Mr. Fineman from Sol Lesser.

The story, by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea Lighton, while essentially a drama adapted to bring out the artistry of Mr. Peters and his supporting cast, has also its moments of comedy relief.

An imposing cabaret setting of the period of King "Tut" permits Hank Mann, as an archeologist, to discover that too free imbibing of Haig and Haig of the period of 3000 B. C. has the effect of bringing several beautiful mummies to life—in his imagination—to resultant laughable action.

Miss Dubye de Remer is resuming screen activity for the first time since her recent illness.

Christine Mayo, George Nichols, Hank Mann, Cyril Chadwick, Wedgewood Nowell, Aileen Pringle and Charles Wellsley have important roles in the Feinman production.

Clarence Brown, who directed "The Great Redeemer," and more latterly Hope Hampton in "The Light in the Dark," is directing. Charles Dorian is assistant, and Frank D. Ormstron has the post of art director.

Silvano Balboni makes his American debut as cameraman. He handled the photography of "Quo Vadis," "The Last Days of Pompeii" and other foreign made spectacles.

George D. Gould, formerly with Motion Picture News, is now on the Coast, representing independent producers in various capacities.

Walter Anthony of Principal Pictures Corporation has gone to Tucson to confer with Harold Bell Wright relative to the latter's stories which Principal will adapt to the screen.

Edmund Goulding has completed the script for "Broadway After Dark," which Warner Brothers will make next season. No directors, however, has been selected to direct this picture. Mr. Goulding has been selected by David Belasco to write the screen version of "Tiger Rose," in which Lenore Ulric will be starred.

It is now definitely known that production at the Warner studios on the David Belasco plays will not start until the latter part of June. Then all the stars who will appear in the Belasco pictures will be here. They include John Barrymore, Lenore Ulric and Hope Hampton, all of whom are now under contract. Sydney Franklin will direct "Tiger Rose."

Two of the players under Warner Brothers' contract have been farmed out. They are Marie Prevost and Monte Blue. Monte Blue will work for Universal, while Miss Prevost has been loaned to Louis B. Mayer for "The Climbers."

Wesley Barry has started production on the first of his new series of Warner Brother pictures, "The Printer's Devil." William Beaudine is directing. "The Printer's Devil" is an original story by Julian Josephson.

Estelle Taylor, Rod LaRoque and Kathryn McGuire compose the star triumvirate which will share stellar dramatic honors in Richard Thomas' newest six-reel thriller, "Other Men's Money," now in production at the Hollywood Studios. The comedy players are headed by Tom Wilson, delineator of negro types and famous for his work in "Reported Missing."

Lionel Belmore and Lillian Leighton have been added to the cast of "Other Men's Money," under the direction of Richard Thomas, which is in production at the Hollywood Studios.

Burnell Manly, who scenarized "Women Wake Up" for King Vidor, adapted Daniel Frederick Whitcomb's original screen story, "Other Men's Money," for Richard Thomas, which the latter is directing at the Hollywood Studios.

"Little Church" Doing a Big Winning Business

Following the presentation of the Warner Brothers' classic of the screen, "The Little Church Around the Corner," at the Strand Theatre, New York, and due to the unusually favorable comment that has been accorded the feature by both the newspaper critics and the trade press, many theatres throughout the country are creating box-office records with the Warner classic, according to an announcement.

Edward L. Reed, managing director of the Strand, Providence, following the showing of the film, is authority for the statement that from a box-office standpoint the picture was a success, and that the patrons were favorably impressed with its entertaining values.

Manager Reed's letter to the Warner home offices reads in part as follows: "We have shown your picture, 'The Little Church Around the Corner,' in our theatre, and desire to express our appreciation of this unusually fine production. We are pleased to tell you that our audiences commented very favorably upon the picture. This, of course, is of vital importance to the exhibitor. From the box-office standpoint, also, it was a huge success."

The exchanges handling the Warner classics are said to report many big bookings in their respective territories. Among the more recent contracts approved at the Warner offices are the Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Madison, Detroit; Modern, Providence; Modern and Beacon, Boston; Strand, San Francisco; California, Los Angeles; Alcazar, Birmingham, and the New Theatre, Baltimore.

Much Speculation Over Exchanges in Chicago in 1923-24

CHICAGO — (Special) — Just what settlement has been reached, if any, between Warner Brothers and Second National Exchange, a Balaban & Katz subsidiary handling Warner Brothers product here, has not been definitely ascertained, although there are many rumors current in film circles. There is some talk hereabouts relative to the possibilities of Warner Brothers establishing their own exchange here to handle their distribution next season, but this report is merely local and nothing definite has reached the ears of exhibitors as yet.

When the annual M. P. T. O. A. convention is held here next month, independent exhibitors and exchangemen will be warmly received b yexchange men here. The boys along South Wabash avenue are planning a little feast of their own during the convention.

Whether or not Johnny Hines' feature, "Luck," will be booked into the luxurious Chicago Theatre as was his previous picture, "Sure Fire Flint," is problematical. The Balaban & Katz offices are mum on the subject, although the general impression here was that "Luck" was going into that house some time this month. However, the bookings for the Chicago for the rest of the month do not include "Luck," which is generally conceded to be the best of the pictures made by Hines under the C. C. Burr banner.

Frank Zambreni of Progress Pictures Exchange here, is lining up a wonderful stock of specials for next season. He has taken over the entire Arrow special output, including "Jacqueline," "Lost in a Big City," "The Broken Violin," "The Rip Tide" and "The Little Red Schoolhouse." He is also taking advantage of the local craze for pictures dwelling on the lives of movie stars by playing up the other Arrow picture, "Night Life in Hollywood," which was recently given a showing at a Loop theatre.

Joe Friedman and his wife returned last week from Atlantic City, N. J., where they spent a two-week vacation.

Louis Baum, Vice-President of Equity Pictures Corporation, was a recent visitor to Chicago's Film Row. This was his second visit in five weeks. He was en route to New York.

Ascher Brothers, who have been literally mopping up with Al Lichtmans Preferred Pictures, booked out of Joe Friedman's exchange, have booked "Poor Men's Wives" to open at the Chicago week of April 23. Ed Grossman, who is looking after the Lichtman interests in this territory, went to New York last week to confer with his chief, and returned late this week.

Following the Chicago Theatre engagement of "Poor Men's Wives," that Gasnier special will play over the L. & T. circuit of theatres in this city.

Trade News

Sol Lesser, Irving Lesser and several other independents spent virtually the entire week in Atlantic City attending the First National meeting there.

Bobby North denies he is in any way interested in the Gallagher & Shean production proposition, although both had approached him with a plan.

Weiss Brothers, planning increased activity in the independent market, will shortly move into larger quarters in the same building—the Loew State—wherein their present offices are located.

Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announced this week the delivery of a print of their latest special, "Mary of the Movies," in which a bevy of stars are said to appear.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, publicity director of Arrow Film Corporation, returned to New York from Providence, R. I., Monday, after having successfully staged the New England premiere showing of the Arrow special, "Lost in a Big City," at the Rialto in that city.

George Gould, formerly of the Motion Picture News, is in Los Angeles, acting as personal representative for a number of independent producers there.

Betty Blythe will go to Berlin to appear in "Chu Chin Chow," which Herbert Wilcox will produce. Jane Novak is another American star who is expected to go across the pond to appear in a series of foreign-financed pictures.

Goodman Signs Three Stars

Daniel Carson Goodman, producer of "Has the World Gone Mad?", the latest Equity production, in addition to Mary Carr and Mildred Harris, this week signed Emmett Mack, the talented young actor who has been working under D. W. Griffith, for an important role in his next picture, which Kenneth Webb is directing. The engagement of Mary Carr and Mildred Harris was exclusively reported in this department last week.

Leah Baird Scoring a Triumph in Texas

"Is Divorce a Failure?" the big Leah Baird Special for Associated Exhibitors, has been scoring a succession of triumphs in Texas cities in the last two weeks, it is reported. Miss Baird has been making personal appearances in connection with some of the showings—the bookings having been arranged on dates to insure her presence, and has been the guest of honor at a number of functions.

In Houston Miss Baird was received by Carl Belk, City Manager, who presented to her a floral key to the city. Her first address was at the opening matinee in William Horwitz's Iris Theatre. She also attended a special session of the Houston Women's Club and a health campaign meeting at the Conopus Club, and was interviewed at length by the Houston press.

In its review of "Is Divorce a Failure?" the Houston Post said in part: "Not alone is 'Is Divorce a Failure?' dramatic, but it is spectacular in setting and actions."

E. K. Lincoln Special Has Many Big Scenes

"The Right of the Strongest," the first picture E. K. Lincoln has made in the West in many months, is proceeding rapidly and those who have seen the "rushes" predict that this will be one of the truly big pictures of the year. The story itself, the popularity of the star, the brilliant supporting cast, the name of the author, Frances Nimmo Greene, the title, and the big fight and storm scenes, all point to a production of the type to appeal to everyone who likes the best in films.

Particular praise has been forthcoming for the fight and the storm scenes which would "put over," it is claimed, almost any picture. In no sense has either of these scenes merely been "hauled in" to add to the tension. Even on the Coast, where fight scenes in picture-making are far from a novelty, there has been continuous discussion of the "real fight" between Mr. Lincoln, the star, and his husky opponent. Mrs. Greene, who also wrote "One Clear Call," has been in constant touch with the production unit.

While no arrangements have been completed for the distribution of "The Right of the Strongest," one of the larger releasing organizations has evinced a decided interest in this picture.

"Bad Man" to Star Blinn on Screen

Holbrook Blinn, who starred in "The Bad Man" during its run on Broadway two seasons ago and on the road ever since, will appear in the same part in Edwin Carewe's screen production of the play, which will be distributed through First National. The announcement was made by Carewe before leaving Los Angeles for Atlantic City, where he will attend the First National convention.

It is probable that the run of the show now in Los Angeles will continue until production starts on the screen version. At the George M. Cohan Theatre in New York "The Bad Man" enjoyed one of the most successful runs of the season.

To Publish Talmadge Picture

Robert McBride & Company have accepted for early Fall publication "Ashes of Vengeance" by H. B. Somerville, the book purchased by Joseph M. Schenck, while in England last Summer, for Norma Talmadge, which is now being filmed at the United Studios, Hollywood, with Frank Lloyd directing for First National release.

McBride & Company have planned an exhaustive publicity tie-up of the novel with the picture, and the newspaper syndicate rights of the story will be released simultaneously with the release of the film, and will run in leading dailies of all the principal cities, profusely illustrated with stills from the picture.

"Ashes of Vengeance" is a thrilling, swashbuckling romance of Old France. The book will be illustrated with 32 half-tones of Norma Talmadge, Conway Tearle and Courtney Foote in stills from the photodrama.

Schenck Buys "Secrets"

Joseph M. Schenck this week announces the purchase of two stories for productions with Norma and Constance Talmadge. "Secrets," a Broadway stage success now running at the Fulton Theatre with Margaret Lawrence, will serve as a vehicle for Norma, and Constance will appear in "Barbara Winslow, Rebel," from the novel by Elizabeth Ellis, an English authoress.

Paramount Film Makes Big Hit

James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," had its California premiere at Sid Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood Tuesday evening, April 10. It was a brilliant affair, according to Los Angeles reports, and the response of the public through the succeeding days has been exceptional.

With the house completely sold out on the opening night at $2.50 a seat, the audience went wild with enthusiasm, applauding almost continuously. Sid Grauman had prepared an elaborate presentation.

The Los Angeles newspaper critics were no less enthusiastic and unanimous in their verdict on the picture than were those of New York. Edwin Schallert said in the Times: "Big and sweeping. It brings home as perhaps nothing else could something of that unflinching spirit and that determination which drives men Westward to the sun."

Florence Lawrence, in the Examiner, said: "There is a rhythm of empire-building about the whole which is impelling."

"As entertainment the photoplay reaches the apex of cinematic art," said Guy Price, in the Herald. Pearl Rall, in the Express: "It is worth all and more than the advance information vouchsafed."

Fifteen Pictures Sold Abroad

The announcement of the sale of fifteen First National pictures for Austria, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Bulgaria, Poland, European Turkey and Greece is made this week by First National Pictures.

The Sascha Film Industrie of Vienna has purchased for the above territory, "Daddy," "Toby Tyler," "The Dangerous Age," "Scrap Iron," "The Hottentot," "Fury," "Daughter of Two Worlds," "The Rosary," "Dangerous Business," "Brawn of the North," "Her Mad Bargain," "White Shoulders," "Money, Money, Money," "The Scoffer" and "The Devils' Garden." "Daddy" and "Toby Tyler" will be distributed in Brazil by the Compannia Brazil Cinematographica. The Madan Theatres, Ltd., of Calcutta, India, have purchased "Penrod" for India, Burma and Ceylon.

Releases Artistic Booklet on Feature

A strikingly attractive souvenir booklet, calling attention to the virtues of the current Encore feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," is being distributed by Associated Exhibitors, its appearance being synonymous with the official release of the picture, which was set for April 8. The booklet, which is unique in arrangement and replete with artistic appeal, was the work of J. Irving Greene, Associated's director of advertising and publicity.

The ornate cover is in an old-fashioned wall paper design, suggestive of the "funny old house" which was the scene of much of the tragedy, the pathos and the romance in Alice Adams' life. On the front cover, encased in an oval frame, is a charming portrait of Miss Vidor as Alice. In the ten pages are other portraits of the star; Booth Tarkington, of whose prize novel the film is a picturization, and Rowland V. Lee, who directed the production; character poses of Vernon Steele as Arthur Russell, Claude Gillingwater as Virgil Adams, Margaret McWade as Mrs. Adams, Harold Goodwin as Walter Adams, and Thomas Ricketts at J. A. Lamb; an assortment of action stills from the picture, and reproductions of some of the posters and other advertising aids which have been prepared for the use of exhibitors.

The subject matter of the text includes Florence Vidor's pledge, made voluntarily before production work began, that she would picturize "Alice Adams" as Mr. Tarkington conceived the story and the character or not at all. Space is devoted, too, to sidelights on the author's aims and work, the methods employed by Mr. Lee in directing the picture, glimpses of the careers of the leading figures in the supporting cast, an outline of the story, with many passages in Mr. Tarkington's own language, and points in the national advertising campaign of Encore Pictures, this accompanied by a fac-simile of a full-page Saturday Evening Post display and reproductions of the covers of some of the magazines in which extended announcements have appeared.

The souvenir is in addition to a large and comprehensive campaign book which is being sent out by Associated, and which outlines in detail a wealth of practical exploitation plans, with suggestions for a complete, widespread advertising and publicity campaign, adaptable to theatres of every size. Included in the advertising aids are one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters, each depicting a striking scene from the production.

Though the illustrated booklet is receiving wide circulation, it is designed rather as a souvenir than as a practical, working handbook, and its artistic qualities and charming portraits of Florence Vidor insure its preservation as a memento.

First National Starts Three New Adaptations

Three stories have just been turned over to continuity writers by First National far adaptation. They are "The Huntress," a novel by Hulbert Footner; "Her Temporary Husband," a play by Edward A. Paulton, and "Lord of the Thundergate," a novel by Sidney Herschel Small.

Percy Heath has been assigned to write the continuity on "The Huntress," which is an intensely dramatic story of the Canadian Northwest. There are many telling scenes in which a beautiful Indian girl is the center of interest. The plot is novel and particularly well suited to motion picture treatment.

"Her Temporary Husband" is being adapted by F. McGrew Willis, who has excellent material to work with in a distinctly modern story with a society background. There are a number of big situations in the play that lend themselves particularly well to presentation on the screen.

Fred Myton is handling "Lord of the Thundergate," which may be characterized as a Japanese "Prisoner of Zenda." It ran serially in the Sunset magazine and was published last fall by Bobbs-Merrill. An American boy, reared in Japan, returns to the United States when grown up, is sent back to Japan on construction work and is framed by his American partner and rival in love. In the end he is thoroughly rehabilitated and able to return to America with a beautiful bride.

Another famous play which probably will be assigned to a continuity writer at an early date is "The Bad Man," one of the successful Broadway plays. Mexico provides the locale for this diverting story, which is a mixture of drama, comedy and satire.

J. H. Moulder Lauds Fox Picture

Additional testimony to the universal appeal the Fox special "The Town That Forgot God" has for all classes of theatre goers, says Fox, is being daily received by the branch offices of Fox Film Corporation. One of the latest messages of commendation for the picture is from Manager J. H. Moulder, of the Empress Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma, which said in part:

"I feel called upon to write you a message in favor of the as yet unequalled Fox picture, 'The Town That Forgot God.'"

Film Plot Adheres to Lines of Story

The first Gene Stratton-Porter production, "Michael O'Halloran," set for release July 1 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is, it is said, expected to settle for all time the warfare existing between authors and producers regarding the treatment of popular novels in their transfer to the screen.

Mrs. Porter is alleged to be the most popular of living authors. Good Housekeeping, in its December, 1922, issue, announced that a thorough investigation has shown that, next to the Bible, her books have had the largest sale of any in the whole history of literature. According to a sworn statement of her publishers, more than 10,000,000 copies of her novels have been sold.

Mrs. Porter produced "Michael O'Halloran" in exactly the way she thought it ought to be produced. She personally supervised every portion of it. For that reason authors, who have had disputes with producing companies over the manner in which their stories have appeared on the screen, expect this production to vindicate their stand that a story should be put on the screen without change.

Mrs. Porter decided against selling the rights to her stories to producers because, years ago, one of her most popular novels was treated on the screen in a way that in no manner coincided with her conception of how the story should have been produced.

Probable "Champ" in Selznick Two-Reeler

"Will He Conquer Dempsey?" is the title which the Selznick Distributing Corporation has selected for the two-reel short subject feature which it has scheduled for release April 21.

This subject concerns Luis Angel Firpo, who is considered in some quarters a contender for Jack Dempsey's championship crown. The Selznick film, which was produced by Philip Rosen, shows Firpo hard at work training in the private gym of Philadelphia Jack O'Brien, and also includes shots of road work and private glimpses into the life of this latest find in the heavyweight class of pugilists.

Firpo is known as the "mystery man" of the ring. He came to this country about a year ago an unknown Argentinian, fought a few battles and returned to South America without creating any particular interest here. A few months ago he returned, but it was a new Firpo, a man who was able to walk into the Garden ring and knock out Bill Brennan, a veteran of the squared circle and one who had only been knocked out twice before, and then it took Dempsey himself to perform the trick.

Undersea Adventure in Williamson Film

In "Wonders of the Sea," J. E. Williamson's newest undersea picture, now being distributed by Film Booking Offices, two divers are shown ready to descend to the bottom of the ocean. One is dressed in the regulation diving suit, which contains an air pipe and life line connection with the surface. The other wears a self-contained diving suit, consisting of metalled hat, weighted suit and heavily metalled shoes, but with no air pipe or life line connection with the surface.

Both divers descend to the bottom of the ocean, where they investigate coral reefs, locate sunken vessels, have a battle with a deadly moray in which the divers come off victorious, and finally make a thrilling escape from a giant octopus just as it throws off its sacs of ink which blackens the water much like a smoke screen—a method of defense, a subtitle states, that the octopus uses to conceal himself and outwit his prey.

Harry Garson to Make Universal-Jewel

J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson have been signed to be featured in a new Universal-Jewel production, word has just come from Universal City. It is to be a Harry Garson production, that director having recently made arrangements to make this picture for Universal under special conditions.

The production is heralded as a screen thriller with a list of natural cataclysms that sounds like a storm warning during the equinox. Thunderstorms, typhoons and tidal waves will vie with each other in the plot and those who have read the story assert that a nice wet time will be had by all the cast.

No name has been selected for the picture. It is being adapted from an original story by John H. Blackwood. This story deals with a man's regeneration through disaster.

"Girl of Golden West" Released Next Month

Capping a climax of a successful career which began with its presentation at the Belasco Theatre in November, 1905, "The Girl of the Golden West" will finally reach the public in photoplay form next month, when the long heralded Edwin Carewe production will be issued by First National Pictures. The progress of the picture has been closely watched by press and public, and the advance interest is probably greater than that accorded any production of recent date.

"The Girl of the Golden West," from the pen of David Belasco, is regarded by students of the American drama as one of the three greatest plays ever written in America. It is probable that every city and town that at any time has housed a stock or repertoire company has seen "The Girl of the Golden West."

In the title role of this dramatic masterpiece is Sylvia Dreamer. The supporting cast includes J. Warren Kerrigan, who recently returned to the screen in a leading role in "The Covered Wagon"; Russell Simpson, noted character actor; Rosemary Theby, playing the part of a Mexican vamp; Wilfred Lucus, Hector Sarno, Nelson McDowell, Charles McHugh and Cecil Holland.

"The Girl of the Golden West" also has the distinction of being the first American play to be made into an opera. Under its original title it served as one of Caruso's greatest successes.

The filming of this picture was completed last week after three months of strenuous work, one of which was spent in the actual locale of the story filming the scenes of the famous gold rush district of California of the '49 period.

"Safety Last" Highly Praised by Reviewers

Out of a deluge of newspaper reviewers' ardent praise of "Safety Last" wherever Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy has begun its career of extended runs, Pathe quotes significant expressions which come under the head of information useful to exhibitors and their patrons. As in the case of the New York reviewers, these writers, first of all, are impressed with the fact that Lloyd has gifted the screen with a new "punch"—laughter plus thrills.

"The power of the motion picture to hypnotize the emotions of the spectator and bend them at will," writes Harold Heffernan in the Detroit News, "was never more completely demonstrated than in Harold Lloyd's new seven-reel comedy, Safety Last.'"

The Oregon Sunday Journal says: "The production contains one of the most delightful love stories ever screened. As the worshipping young man, Harold Lloyd puts all the famous screen lovers to shame and mingles sentiment with comedy in a charming manner."

Under the head: "'Safety Last' Will Smash Reputations," the Greensboro (N. C. Daily News says—"Reputations totter when they are struck by a thing like 'Safety Last.' All producers must tighten up a notch or two of they are to maintain the pace set by that film. To understand the joy of the thing it is necessary to see it."

Betty Craig, writing in the Denver Post, in the course of a review occupying a full column, says: "Harold Lloyd's latest comedy 'Safety Last,' which opened its engagement at both the Rialto and the Princess on Sunday, is unquestionably in a niche all by itself in the film hall of fame. It is worth any amount of standing in line to get to see it."

Filming Activities of First National

Shooting was completed recently in Los Angeles by First National on Frank Borzage's "Children of Dust," adapted from the magazine story, "Terwilliger." Borzage is searching the field of scenario writers before selecting the continuity writer of his next story, "Dust in the Doorway."

Edwin Carewe left Sunday for Atlantic City to attend the First National convention. He is taking with him the completed print of "The Girl of the Golden West" and will work on the script of "The Bad Man" during the journey.

Constance Talmadge has gone to Yosemite Valley, the most picturesque spot in America, to film outdoor scenes for "Dulcy." At the United Studios the spectacular ball room scenes for Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance" are now being shot. Director Frank Lloyd announces that big street scenes of St. Bartholomew's Eve Massacre will be filmed in the near future.

The filming of the laundry and studio scenes of "Trilby" were completed last week by Richard Walton Tully. Charles Logue is doing the continuity for James Young's next story "Panjolo." The biggest scenes of Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle" were filmed last week, including the Arabian feast scenes with seventy dancing girls.

Wide Publicity for Hodkinson Picture

Owing to the efforts of General Manager A. C. Hoganson, of the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, assisted by C. L. Peavey, branch manager for the Hodkinson corporation at Cleveland, and Jack Edwards, representing the home office, an unusual amount of exploitation and publicity was secured for the opening of Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the Alhambra.

Eighty 24-sheet boards were secured throughout the city. Twenty-five cut-outs were used in windows and other important junction points. Twenty thousand heralds were distributed from house to house in all sections of the town. Twenty-five two-column stories appeared in nearby suburban newspapers. Prior to the opening the Alhambra Theatre came out with a full-page smash in all of the leading newspapers. A special show was given free to 400 newsboys, which gave the production 400 enthusiastic boosters.

The first two days, according to Manager Hoganson, "Down to the Sea in Ships" broke the house record held by "Over the Hill."

Big Crowds Attracted by Lichtman Picture

Reports received by the Al Lichtman Corporation from exhibitors who have played the Preferred Picture, "The Hero," indicate that this release is bringing in large receipts to the box office as well as earning unanimous praise from the patrons and critics as one of the really outstanding pictures of the year. When the play ran in New York last season it was promptly classified by metropolitan reviewers as exceptional and was chosen by Burns Mantle for his "Best Plays of 1922."

The picture version produced by B. P. Schulberg was singled out by the National Board of Review's Committee on Exceptional Photoplays and later was listed by Photoplay Magazine as the finest picture released during March. In addition to the story the work of the players who include Barbara La Marr, Gaston Glass, John Sainpolis, David Butler and Doris Pawn has invariably aroused praise, it it stated.

Colleen Moore Starts on Big Picture

Colleen Moore in the leading feminine role and under the personal supervision of Frances Marion, Director George William Hill has commenced work in California on the filming of Miss Marion's screen version of Jack Boyle's story, "The Daughter of Mother McGinn," for the Cosmopolitan Corporation. This is Miss Moore's second Cosmopolitan picture, the first having been "The Nth Commandment."

Supporting Miss Moore and Forrest Stanley, who will be remembered long for his wonderful performance as Charles Brandon in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," is an excellent cast. Stanley will be seen as "Blackie." George Cooper will portray the underworld comedian, "Travel." Margaret Seddon of "Just Around the Corner" fame, is playing "Mother McGinn," widow of a notorious crook who died in prison and, while she herself seeks to reform her underworld acquaintances, tries to keep her daughter as far from them as possible with rather startling results.

The story is being photographed by L. W. O'Connell and is being made at the Goldwyn Culver City Studios.

Cast Selected for Niblo's "Captain Applejack"

The principal members of the cast of "Captain Applejack," Fred Niblo's second production for release by Metro Pictures Corporation, have already been selected, and actual studio work on the film version of this famous stage play by Walter Hackett will soon begin. Matt Moore, Enid Bennett, Barbara La Marr, Robert McKim and Thomas Ricketts are the players who have already been signed to appear in the production.

Mr. Moore, who recently arrived in Los Angeles from New York, will appear in the title role, which Wallace Eddinger created on the stage.

Enid Bennett will enact the role of the demure English miss who shares many of the most exciting adventures on board the pirate ship.

Barbara La Mass has been cast in a role which offers limitless opportunities for her talents.

Robert McKim has also been prominently cast. Thomas Ricketts is the remaining player who has been engaged to date.

Bess Merydth has completed her scenario of the productions, which is presented by Louis B. Mayer.

First National Film

A famous Parisian cafe, "The Dead Cat," a favorite resort of Montmartre, was duplicated on the lot of the Thomas H. Ince studios for the filming of "A Man of Action," Ince's new mystery comedy starring Douglas MacLean, soon to be released through Associated First National.

Two More First National Actors

Announcement was made this week of two more screen players who have been placed under a long term contract to appear in future First National attractions. They are Colleen Moore, who, after a four years' picture career, finds herself one of the most popular leading ladies of the screen, and Maurice Canon, a French favorite, who is now appearing in Richard Walton Tully's "Trilby." Last week First National announced that Sylvia Dreamer, Andree Lafayette and Virginia Brown Faire had been placed under contract.

The acquisition of Colleen Moore and Mr. Canon is in line with First National's policy of finding the best screen talent to appear in pictures.

W. R. Hall Completing European Production

Walter Richard Hall, author and director of many Vitagraph, Selznick, Robertson-Cole and independently made productions, of which "My Dad," starring Johnny Walker, recently enjoyed a successful Broadway run at the George M. Cohan Theatre, is completing his first European made production. It is called "A Love Supreme," of which he is the author.

Theodore Sparkuhl, who photographed "Passion," "Deception," "One Arabian Night," 'Loves of Pharaoh," and other Lubitsch productions, is doing the camera work. Most of the interiors have been "shot" in London and Berlin studios, while the exteriors were made in Paris, Madrid and the Tyrolian Alps.

Most prominent in the all-star cast selected by Hall is the beautiful young Russian actress, Ethel Orff, who is said to rival the famous Pola Negri both in charm and emotional acting.

It is expected the production will be ready for distribution early in May.

Los Angeles Critics Praise Jack Pickford

"'Garrison's Finish' is a propitious vehicle for Jack Pickford's readvent to the screen," said the reviewer for the Los Angeles Examiner, when this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation releases as shown at the California Theatre, Los Angeles. He does some first class acting—sincere acting—that makes legitimate his place at the head of the cast. Madge Bellamy is delicious."

"There's plenty of action in Jack Pickford's newest picture, 'Garrison's Finish,'" said the critic for the Record. "There are two horse races, an escape from a burning barn, a race with a train and a good rough and tumble fight."

"Jack Pickford staged a successful appearance in the photoplay, 'Garrison's Finish,' said the review for the Express. "Action is a strong factor in this feature. Mr. Pickford projects some telling moments. Madge Bellamy is adorable."

"'Garrison's Finish' is of course a horse-race story of the South," said the critic for the Times, "and those who came remained to cheer. This picture should prove to be Jack Pickford's start anew. It is full of good old hokum, but Arthur Rossen has directed it in snappy fashion. Madge Bellamy, beautiful as a spring morning, made much of a very charming role."

Shipman Films Made at Stories' Locales

Ernest Shipman, producer of three film productions soon to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has at last proved, at least to his own satisfaction, his belief that film stories should be made upon the exact locations as called for. For many years Mr. Shipman contended that the successful photoplay was the one which was shot at the place and locale called for by the story, eliminating all "fake" and studio scenery.

He put this to the test in his picturizations of Ralph Connor's famous books. Realizing that the value of Ralph Connor's stories lay in his conception of Canadian life Mr. Shipman, to prove his own belief, took his company from New York up into the upper reaches of the Ottawa River, where he filmed "The Man from Glengarry," recently released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The same sort of wild, but true-to-life, surroundings, it is said, can be found in Mr. Shipman's other two productions soon to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation —"Glengarry Schooldays" and "The Rapids."

'The Man Next Door' Has Many Thrills

"The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," has a thrill in it that Victor Schertzinger, the director, says is unequalled in any picture of the West ever screened. The scenes are of a roundup on the ranch of Col. Wright, father of the heroine in the story, and was shot at Victorville, Cal., on the Palo Verdi ranch.

Other efforts have been made to photograph cattle roundups, but the detail direction bring these scenes out with cameo-like fidelity. Five thousand head of cattle were used in this roundup, which was especially staged by the owners of the Palo Verdi ranch for Mr. Schertzinger.

Fifteen cameras were used in taking the scenes and they were placed behind safety barricades in the very center of the onrushing steers. Some shot the scene from distant hills and others were placed in specially constructed concrete safety cellars and shot the onrushing cattle from below.

"Enemies" to Be in All Big Cities

Arrangements for the first run showing of "Enemies of Women" in all the big key cities are now being made by the Cosmopolitan Corporation. The picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's great romantic novel, acclaimed by the critics as one of the most beautiful photoplays ever made, began an indefinite run in Los Angeles, opening in that city on Tuesday night at Grauman's Rialto Theatre.

"Enemies of Women" will have its first Chicago showing on April 30 when it begins an indefinite engagement at the Roosevelt Theatre. Meantime the film has been playing to capacity audiences at every performance in the Central Theatre, New York, where it had its world's premiere on Easter Sunday and in which theatre it starts its fourth consecutive week next Monday. Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens head the all-star cast. Alan Crosland directed.

MacKaye Praises Hodkinson Film

Percy MacKaye, author of "The Scarecrow," a Film Guild production, starring Glenn Hunter, for distribution through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which has just been finished, witnessed a private showing of the picture.

In commenting upon the picture, and the work of Glenn Hunter in the leading role, Mr. MacKaye was enthusiastic.

Playgoers Film for Release May 27

"The Fortune of Christina McNab," described as a pretty romance with comedy touches, is announced by Playgoers Pictures for release May 27.

"Souls for Sale" Is Held for Second Week

Goldwyn's Rupert Hughes picture of the film colony at Hollywood, "Souls for Sale," started off its second week at the Capitol Theatre, New York, with a bang. Its second Sunday's receipts there were the biggest in the history of the Capitol and not far behind the record-breaking receipts for the first Sunday. The picture has scored one of the biggest successes that New York has ever known. Its takings for the two weeks will be in excess of those taken by most films which run eight and ten weeks in New York theatres of average seating capacity.

Many persons who wanted to see the picture on its second Sunday were turned away from matinee and evening performances because there were no seats to be had.

The film scored a hit of enormous proportions in Los Angeles, and its fame has already spread throughout the country.

Among big first-run theatres in which "Souls for Sale" will be seen are the Chicago Theatre, Chicago; Tom Moore's Rialto, Washington, D. C.; the Delmonte, St. Louis; Reid's Hippodrome, Cleveland; the Liberty, Portland, Ore., and the Coliseum, Seattle, Wash.

Trade Press Praise for Fox Production

Trade press commentators were liberal in their praise of the entertainment value of "Bucking the Barrier," the most recent vehicle of Dustin Farnum which Fox Film Corporation released on April 1.

Following are excerpts from the printed reviews in last week's issues of the trade publications: Exhibitors Herald: "A pleasing little romance with real atmosphere, good direction and several excellent performances."

Moving Picture World: "It offers variety, suspense, and pleasing backgrounds. It is a well directed, entertaining feature for the average program."

Exhibitors Trade Review: "Dustin Farnum does some good work in this picture. Some of the snow scenes are particularly attractive and the lighting and direction are satisfactory."

Universal Picture Is Drawing Big Business

Following its record run of eleven weeks at the Lyric Theatre, New York, and its remarkable success in Philadelphia, where it is crowding the Forrest Theatre, H. A. Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa," the dramatic wild-animal picture being released by Universal, this week opened to capacity business in many key cities throughout the country. Universal officials are elated with the showing the Snow picture is making.

Following its openings this week it will open in more than a score of first-run houses. The middle of May will see the big game hunt on the screens of the country's leading theatres, from coast to coast, it is promised by the Universal sales executives.

Crowds Flock to See "The Tents of Allah"

The Edward A. MacManus production of "The Tents of Allah," one of Associated Exhibitors most popular offerings of the present spring, scored a triumph in its run at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, during the week of April 2, it is reported. The attendance every day was large and the newspaper reviews were particularly enthusiastic in their praise of the feature.

The Evening Herald said in the course of its review: "'The Tents of Allah' presents some distinctly new touches on the screen, Sahara atmosphere, and the art photography is superb."

The Examiner said: "'The Tents of Allah' is an altogether acceptable photoplay." Mabel Brundige Horton wrote in the Evening Express: "Not in spots but all through the film come picture after picture, interesting and delightful to the very end."

Pathe Film Has Many Exploitation Angles

Ingenious kinks in liberal newspaper display advertising, together with attractive lobby displays are reported by Pathe among the rich "Safety Last" opportunities for high grade showmanship seized by managers of both big and average theatres.

The picture played two weeks at the Strand, New York City, including extra 11 A. M. Saturday shows as a means of partly relieving the pressure of overflow patrons.

On Friday night the opening of "Safety Last" at the Rialto Theatre, Newark, N. J., was an exciting occasion in the amusement life of the city. Many were unable to gain admittance. Manager Kashin predicted record business during the whole of the extended run of the Lloyd seven-reeler.

The Rialto's "Safety Last" plans include Saturday morning performances for school children, with preparations to accommodate two in a seat.

In Detroit the big "Safety Last" display ads of the Adams Theatre —which reports all house records broken—contained the following boxed announcement: "I have seen every great comedy since motion pictures began. This is the best. (Signed) John H. Kunsky."

Gilda Gray Is in Paramount Film

Gilda Gray, one of Broadway's most famous dancers, who performs nightly in the Ziegfeld Follies and early every morning at the Rendezvoux, will be seen in her South Sea dance in Allan Dwan's production of "Lawful Larceny," which he is now producing at the Paramount Long Island studio with Nita Naldi, Hope Hampton, Lew Cody and Conrad Nagel in the principal roles.

Big Metro Picture Plays to Capacity

Rex Ingram's brilliant production of "Where the Pavement Ends," for Metro, brought to the Capitol, New York, one of the biggest weeks that theatre has ever known in its housing of big box-office successes.

This greatest of the world's motion picture houses was jammed with fascinated spectators of the thrilling South Seas story, and close-packed crowds thronged the doors at every performance throughout the week's run. The management expressed regret that advance bookings made it impossible to hold the picture over. The cumulative popularity of the picture made it certain that a second week would have surpassed the phenomenal success of the first.

The extraordinary success of "Where the Pavement Ends" was forecast by the praise lavished upon it by metropolitan motion picture critics. They were unanimous in calling it an example of the highest type of film art.

Prominent Actors Added to Cast

Two prominent names in the theatrical world were added last week to the cast of Herbert Brenon's Paramount picture, "The Woman With Four Faces," which features Betty Compson and Richard Dix. They are Gladden James and Eulalie Jensen.

Fox Making Belasco Play

A David Belasco play soon to go into production is that well known drama of American life, "The Governor's Lady." It is said Harry Millarde, director of "Over the Hill," "The Town That Forgot God" and "If Winter Comes," will wield the megaphone.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Stan Laurel Makes Bow as Pathe Star on Schedule for April 29

Stan Laurel starts his career as a star in Hal Roach one-reel comedies, "The Noon Whistle," on Pathe's program for April 29. The character is that of a cheerfully stupid new hand in a planing mill plant where the comedian comes through unscathed while the domineering foreman is driven frantic and then "fired."

"Plunder" reaches its fourteenth episode and leaves the heroine, Pearl White, fighting single-handed three desperadoes in the storeroom of a South American plantation in the midst of flames in whose path is a quantity of explosives.

Snub Pollard and Marie Mosquini are seen in the Hal Roach two-reel comedy, "California or Bust." The hero's courage in flying to the rescue of pioneers beset by Indians plunges them into the heart of a motion picture outfit.

"100 Per Cent Nerve" is the two-reel western of the Range Rider Series starring Leo Maloney which adds hard-riding and hard-fighting drama to this program.

The Aesop's Film Fable called "The Jolly Rounders" deals with the efforts of a bachelor hippopotamus to instill courage and defiance of wifely rule into a married hippopotamus.

Pathe Review No. 17 screens the process of making an etching. Another novelty is called "The Lens Liar"—showing that even the camera, with its reputation for truthfulness, can become a monster of mendaciousness.

White in East Conferring on Mermaids for New Year

Jack White, producer-director of Educational-Mermaid Comedies, accompanied by E. H. Allen, general manager of Mermaid activities in Los Angeles, is in New York conferring with E. H. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, regarding production plans for the 1923-24 season.

Mr. White has recently completed studio work on "Three Strikes" and "Back Fire," the last of the 1922-23 series of Mermaids, which consisted of ten two-reelers featuring Lige Conley in the following variety of subjects: Auto racing, life on an ocean liner, baseball, ranch life, eye specialist, railroading, steeplechasing, art, wild animals, and picture theatres. There were also two comedies featuring Louise Fazenda, a recent acquisition to Mermaid ranks, in which she appeared as a Swedish servant in a mystery house and as a fishing lass in the storm country.

Four girls appeared opposite Conley: Ruth Hiatt, Lillian Hackett, Violet Oliver and Elinor Lynn.

Unusual Praise for Will Rogers

Just as Will Rogers is completing his stage season in "The Follies" prior to beginning work as star of a series of two-reelers which Hal Roach will produce for Pathe, the critic of the Chicago News has published a glowing tribute to him in which he says in part: "Will Rogers is one of the best assets the motion picture business has today—partly because he is a humorist of simple, salty and pungent savor, also because when he is through telling his story he quits. 'Fruits of Faith' illustrates these points. There is this about a Rogers picture, it can't be translated into words. He is a comedian, humorist, philosopher and worth seeing."

Unique Staging

A novelty in short subject presentation is the manner in which Keith circuit theatres are handling "Topics of the Day" and "Aesop's Film Fables." The Chicago and Tivoli theatres in Chicago gave the "Topics" an unusual staging, while the Grand Central in St. Louis and the Royal in New York presented the "Fables" with a jazz orchestra of ten musicians behind a scrim drop, followed by a popular song as the film was shown on a transparent screen. The audiences are said to have responded enthusiastically.

Spencer Engaged for Long Term

Fred Spencer's first Century release, "Gasoline Love," will have its title changed to "Speed Bugs." In recognition of his work in this comedy Spencer has signed a long contract with the Stern brothers.

It is understood that Spencer is to have some leading "heavy" roles which will agree with his 325 pounds. "Speed Bugs" recounts the love affairs of a fat garage proprietor who finally wins the tiny lady of his choice in a reckless automobile race.

Title Changed

The title of Archie Mayo's first Century Comedy, a parody on "The Leather Pushers," has been changed to "The Imperfect Lover." Brownie, the Century dog, is the star of this two-reeler for Universal release. The theme deals with the prize ring and shows hod a brindle pup cleverly saves his friend from being knocked out.

Christie Producing Comedy with White Players in Negro Roles

Al Christie is well along in production of a comedy for Educational release, which will be in the nature of an experiment, for, while the cast is composed of well-known Christie players, they appear in black face portraying negro roles. This promises to be a novel production and while negro comedies have been attempted before with negro actors, it is believed that this is the first time that a prominent producing organization has attempted a comedy of this type exclusively with white players.

Christie's idea is that white players, under careful direction, can bring out the comedy of the negro with the skill of the trained white comedian. To a certain extent he is utilizing old minstrel methods in making a black-face comedy with white players. Definite characterization is being employed and anything in the nature of burlesque is taboo. It is a genuine negro story, a legitimate and straight comedy. The entire production is being handled in the same high-class manner as other Christie productions.

The title of the comedy is "Roll Along," the scenes which were largely taken on the Sacramento River, are similar to those of the Mississippi where the action is laid and there are several replicas of Mississippi River steamers. Jimmie Adams and Babe London have prominent roles.

The "rushes" for the production are said to be very encouraging, and a writer in a Hollywood newspaper says the players are very much engrossed in their efforts and much may be expected of them.

Henry Murdock Is Signed by Century

Henry Murdock, well-known comedian, who has been with Christie for three years, has been signed by Stern Brothers for Century Comedies. His initial appearance will be with Fred Spencer in "Hay! Hay!"

Hibbard Completes Two for Educational

Fred Hibbard has completed two Cameo Comedies for Educational, "Exit Stranger" and "Small Change." Virginia Vance, who plays the leading role, is supported by Cliff Bowes in the first and by Billy Eugene in the second.

"Oliver Twisted" Is Joe Rock's Latest

Joe Rock has completed his eighth comedy, "Oliver Twisted," which as its title implies is a burlesque on Charles Dickens' celebrated novel. It is being released on the independent market.

Rohlfs Visiting Hodkinson Exchanges

J. G. Rohlfs, short subject sales manager for Hodkinson, has left New York on a flying visit to exchanges in Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Boston in the interest of short subjects.

Was Forerunner of Big Hunt Films

With several feature pictures dealing with big game hunting in Africa being exploited at the present time, Educational calls attention to its special, "Man vs. Beast," as being perhaps the forerunner of them all. This picture, originally in five reels, was cut down to two in accordance with Educational's short subject policy, all the "meat" being retained. It continues to be a big box office attraction and is occasioning much favorable comment from newspapers and exhibitors. The Capitol in St. Paul calls it "the most remarkable jungle picture we have ever seen" and the Times Herald of Waco, Texas, says it is especially remarkable for the large number of thrilling close-ups of conflicts between men and ferocious wild beasts.

would be big enough to make his hands real warm, anyhow.

Of course, the films MAY have been in cans. That is possible, but nothing of the sort is indicated by the article. Anyhow, one of them was on fire, and one would be QUITE sufficient, I would say.

But after all this was not what I started out to write about. I had in mind the pointing out of the danger of articles of this sort, written by men who know as much about the thing they attempt to write of as a hog knows of Heaven. The projection room was, so the article says, supposed to be fireproof. It was "constructed of sheet metal throughout."

How many times must exhibitors and officials be told that it requires more than fireproof walls to make a fireproof projection room. I suppose the facts are that the observation and lens ports were not closed; also, perhaps, the projection room door was wide open. The theatre was entirely destroyed. Had the exhibitor or projectionist had a handbook, and followed its instructions, that theatre, in all human probability would not be burned, and the projectionist would not be dead.

The danger of the article in question is just this: Only a dozen or so patrons still remained in the theatre, it being the end of the show. Not one of them was injured. The article is written in a way that would lead the people of Tulsa to believe a film fire is immensely dangerous. As a result, should the least exciting thing happen in a Tulsa theatre in the near future, there will be imminent danger of a panic and death.

If the projection room be properly constructed, with ample vent to carry away the gases and smoke, with fans to insure that it WILL be passed out through the vents, and not into the auditorium, and if the port shutters be PROPERLY fused and the door of the projection room kept CLOSED, there is no more danger to an audience in a projection room (NOT "booth") fire than there would be in kindling a fire in a stove.

It is NOT fire which does the damage to the audience anyhow, but PANIC, and if the above things be properly attended to (see pages 311 to 320 of handbook), there can be no panic, because there will be no visible evidence that there is a fire.

I would recommend to the Tribune that it shoo cub and traveling reporters off motion picture theatre fires, or else edit the copy with a very, very vigorous hand. At least call a projectionist and learn the right names of things, or somewhere near it anyhow.

Theatre Lighting

I am in receipt of two bulletins, numbered L. D. 145 and L. D. 146, just put out by the Edison Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, Harrison, New Jersey, with the request that I express my views with regard to them.

Bulletin L. D. 146 deals with stage lighting, a subject I do not feel at all competent to judge. The bulletin seems to be quite exhaustive and I have not the slightest doubt but that stage men will benefit from it.

Bulletin L. D. 145 is titled: "The Lighting of Theatres and Auditoriums." It is a 24 page pamphlet, with ten illustrations. The subject matter is very interesting; also I believe it will be found of great value, especially to big theatres.

But that is exactly the trouble. Every one who deals with this subject deals with the large theatre auditorium, in which many things are possible which could not even be intelligently attempted in the small theatre. Of course the big theatre is important. Sure! You know, though, Lincoln once remarked that God must love the common folk, because he made so many of them. Well, there are a lot of the small theatres.

My Own Viewpoint

My own viewpoint is that what is needed most of all is a fixed definition of exactly what auditorium illumination is necessary, in foot candles measured at top of seat backs, to serve the purpose of prevention of acts tending to immorality. I believe we need a chart or table giving authoritative data as to exactly what power of concentrated light we may have in any given strength of surrounding illumination, and with any viewing angle, before it becomes an annoyance to the AVERAGE eye—before it sets up eye strain and becomes a glare spot to the average eye. I believe the average could be arrived at by making the tests before twenty-five to fifty people.

Such work as the Edison Lamp Works has done is valuable, yes. We welcome any and all work which tends to lead us to better things, but the two things I have named are hugely important—far more so than anything else in theatre lighting, in my opinion, and they have, so far as I know, never been settled.

True the Eastman Company set up certain standards, but in my opinion they are not nearly complete enough. A glare spot is a glare spot by reason of its own brilliancy with relation to its surroundings. What we need is a chart such as I have indicated, or so it seems to me.

Mighty Good

On the walls of B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre, Forty Second street, near Broadway, I found the following, neatly framed and on the projection room wall. It is evidently for everyone in the Moss organization, from the highest to the lowest. It is distinctly excellent.

COURTESY IS POLITENESS ORIGINATING IN KINDLINESS HABITUALLY EXERCISED, CIVILITY, AND GRACIOUSNESS. THE MARK OF GOOD BREEDING IS DUE CONSIDERATION FOR OTHERS AND A PROPER COURTLINESS OF MANNER.

RULES—

1—Loyal service is respected. Be willing in service.
2—Be polite to all—especially women.
3—Be patient with and gentle and considerate to those under you.
4—Do not laugh or jest at defects and faults in others.
5—Show defference to the sick, the old and the afflicted.
6—At all times observe quietness.
7—Do not judge or act too hastily.
8—Reserve decision until you have heard both sides of a discussion.
9—Let your discourse with business men be short but comprehensive.
10—REPEAT ONLY THE GOOD YOU HAVE HEARD—FORGET ALL ELSE.
11—Learn to smile. A smile and pleasant word carries on.
12—Carefulness is contagious. Strive to make those around you happy. Life is not so short but that there is always ample time for courtesy.

Note—The caps are mine.—(Ed.).

Vent Pipe Connection

From Waco, Texas, comes the following letter from E. F. Roberts:

Dear Friend and Brother:—It has been some time since I have written our department, but here I am again. It seems to me the boys are at sea in the matter of connecting the lamphouse vent pipe, so I am sending sketches of the connection I designed and had made.

In sketch No. 1 the slots must correspond with holes in sketch No. 2. In cutting the slots in No. 1, start one inch from bottom and cut two inches up and three-quarters of an inch to one side, as shown. In No. 2 punch holes three inches down from top. Use damper as a handle to slip pipe up or down.

Have not yet sent my order for the Blue-book, but there is a good reason—sickness in my family. Will have it as soon as possible.

As I understand the matter, the damper stem goes through slots and holes in parts 1 and 2, and the slot is to allow part 2 to be lifted off part 3. I think the horizontal slot is to allow of part 2 being raised up off part 3, and held up by twisting so that the damper stem enters the horizontal slot. Brother Roberts' sketches are excellent, but his description is a bit slim. Well, anyhow, we are all much obliged to him for the vent pipe connection plan. It is simple and easily made.

VOLUME LXI MARCH—APRIL 1923

Index to Photoplays

Accompanying list includes, in addition to pictures announced for release during March and April, all productions on which reviews or consensus of trade paper criticism was published during this period, the date of issue containing this information being also shown. Where such reference is omitted, information will probably appear in next volume.

Serials are indexed under general title. Unless otherwise specified, all subjects listed are five-reel dramas.

Great care has been used to make this information as accurate as possible. If any errors are detected, we would appreciate having our attention called to them, so that our card index may be corrected.

If information is desired regarding any picture, either previously released or forthcoming, which are not included in this list, we will be pleased to furnish same on request.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

President Dwyer of A. M. P. E. D. A. States the Supply Dealer's Case

WE are in receipt of the following communication from Leo E. Dywer, president of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America:

Cleveland, O., April 9, 1923.

Mr. E. T. Keyser,
Editor Equipment Department,
Moving Picture World.

Dear Mr. Keyser:

I have read with interest your very interesting editorial in the Better Equipment Department, entitled, "What the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America Means to the Motion Picture Industry."

It is certainly gratifying to know and realize that equipment men are beginning to be recognized as a factor and important cog in the vast machine that goes to make up this wonderful industry, wherein the past years we have been considered of very little importance by a great many exhibitors. However, there are many exhibitors who do have respect and confidence in us and look to us for advice and assistance as they realize we have considerable to do with the successful operation of their theatres.

The average exhibitor, not familiar with the motion picture equipment and supply business has the idea that the supply dealer rolls in wealth and large profits. To the contrary, this branch of the business is a struggle, due to some of the following reasons:

First, we must employ competent high-salaried salesmen, mechanics, managers, shipping clerks, installation men and office employees who are familiar with this line. We are always compelled to pay extremely high rents as the exhibitors expect us as a rule to be on the ground floor space in the film buildings. If we are to conduct business as average customers expect us to, we must carry large stocks running into many, many thousands of dollars. This takes a lot of space to store, handle and display properly at $1.00 to $2.00 per foot.

Equipment Salesmen's Qualifications

Competent employees in the equipment business constitute a problem that only the experienced equipment man realizes, as there are so few supply houses considering the other lines of business that these employees are at a premium.

Let me illustrate for instance the qualifications that a motion picture equipment salesman must have. First, he must be of good appearance. He must be thoroughly posted so that he can hand out most any kind of information which might be asked him. He should be a graduate projectionist, at least must know more about all makes of picture machines, screens, motor generators, electricity, etc., than the projectionist on the job. He must know all about lenses' different angles, be able to repair a machine if necessary, know all the movie actresses by their first names, which pictures are good and bad and the producer's name. Be able to install a complete equipment, carry two or three hundred pounds of equipment up to the booth and above all, he must be a good salesman, a mixer, a projection engineer, a business man and have a pretty good understanding of the laws of the State he is working in pertaining to all amusement enterprises.

Equipment Financing

For some unknown reason for which no equipment man can guess, the average exhibitor expects him to be a wizard at financing and is very much offended if the equipment man does not give him all the way from three months to three years to pay for his equipment. This sounds all right and is all right if the equipment man can afford to do it, but the trouble is he cannot and stay in business.

Besides, it isn't fair to the customer who pays his bills for supplies and equipment promptly to have to wait for material because the equipment man does not have it in stock. His money being tied up with the slow paying demons, he naturally cannot buy more stock until the other fellow pays up, this constituting a hardship to the good customer who is entitled to prompt service.

This situation seems to be shaping itself out, however, as there are financing concerns coming to our rescue who will discount our long term paper so that we can sell equipment along the same lines that automobiles are sold, the purchaser giving a mortgage on the equipment for the unpaid balance. Of course, the interest is rather high at this time, however, it is sometimes worth the difference for the customer rather than lay out a large sum of cash and have the use of the equipment while he is paying for it.

Merchandising

The theatre equipment business is purely a matter of merchandising. Some exhibitors have the idea they should buy theatre equipment along the same lines that they buy film, namely, as cheaply as possible, which is proper, and no one blames them. However, it should be remembered that films are rented, not sold outright, and they only pay for the use of them for a certain length of time and at the expiration of this time they revert back to the owner.

Motion picture equipment is merchandise which carries with it a staple price which is set by the manufacturers and published to the trade, and when sold, remains the permanent property of the exhibitor. The price of it is not determined by the size or location of the theatre, whether large or small.

All the equipment man has to work on is the difference between the cost to the manufacturer, and the selling price which is very limited and not nearly what it should be. For instance, his margin of profit on a certain article may be twenty to thirty per cent, but after all his operating costs are figured out at the end of the year, if he shows one to one-half per cent on his gross sales, he has done pretty well.

Patronizing the Equipment Man

Whenever possible exhibitors should patronize the legitimate equipment man. He needs all the business he can get. His field is limited and territory scattered, his merchandise is costly to sell, due to the railroad fare, territory expenses, detail work and correspondence. He tries to carry everything in stock that a theatre might need or he can at least get it.

There are many customers who will send direct to the factories to buy material and figure they slipped one over on the local supply man who could have supplied it at the same price and made a few cents. Give the local theatre supply house all the business you can as it is to the exhibitor's interest that he prosper.

The average equipment man is a conscientious, hard-working, accommodating fellow. He wants to do the right thing, and generally does more than he agreed to do. The particular reason for this is he must, to keep in business. His business depends on repeat orders and he is constantly thinking of that other equipment you are going to buy from him two or three years from now. So, Mr. Exhibitor, and Mr. Manufacturer, do all you can to help the equipment man, as he is always ready to do anything for you he can, and willingly.

LEO E. DWYER, President,
Association of Motion Picture
Equipment Dealers of America.

Not Entirely Exhibitor's Fault

Mr. Dwyer states most clearly and fairly the handicaps under which the average picture theatre equipment dealer has operated for several years past. At the same time, we do not believe that the exhibitor has been largely to blame for this state of affairs.

Human nature, in any line of business, is of a muchness the world over and we honestly believe that the long credits, to which Mr. Dwyer alludes, were due originally more to the "pay when you feel like but give me the order" attitude of the supply house than to any unreasonable demand on the part of the exhibiting fraternity.

When it comes to discounts, pretty nearly all human beings are built with the same mental slant. We all want everything that is coming to us and if we think we are not getting it, we are apt to put up a yell.

We have seen a busy man spend fifty cents worth of time and seventy-five cents worth of energy chasing a dime under his office desk; or risking a $100,000 life to rescue a $5.00 hat from the traffic of a crowded street.

The exhibitor did not teach himself that he could hang up a supply dealer. This lesson was very effectively taught him by someone who wanted to grab the business from a competitor. And, when it comes to discounts, a purchaser, naturally, wants to be sure that he has the rock-bottom price—and by rock-bottom he means that he is paying just as little as his competitor for the same article and the same service.

A man will struggle and fuss and figure and cuss to discover where an unaccountable $5.00 went and be mighty unhappy if he thinks that he lost it. But the minute he remembers that he spent it for carfare, taxicabs, or anything else—no matter how useless—he is perfectly contented and happy once more, because he figures that he had received something for his money.

It is just the same way with purchasing picture theatre equipment or anything else. As long as a purchaser has an unaccountable suspicion that he is being asked to pay more for the same article or the same service than someone else is giving up for them, he is bound to be disgruntled and to fight like the deuce for that extra discount.

Between us, it does look as if it were an equipment dealer who began cutting the prices.

We believe that the majority of exhibitors are and always will be willing to pay promptly for both service and supplies and are equally willing to pay a fair price for both, but the disturbing element in the mind of the purchasing exhibitor is just how much better terms in both time and discounts his opposition has been paying.

We have had the pleasure of sitting in at several meetings of the Eastern Zone of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America and the boys who constitute the active membership frankly admit their own share of blame for such conditions in the past.

That they have seen the error of their ways and have started on a new and more businesslike course means much for the stability of the equipment industry and the future welfare of the entire moving picture industry.

Seattle's Blue Mouse Enters Theatre Rest Room Showing

IN last week's issue we illustrated and described the ladies' rest room of the Strand Theatre, Seattle.

Not to be outdone in the exposition of the comforts which it offers its patrons, Hamrick's Blue Mouse, another Seattle house, has come across in time for publication this week with a photograph which is a distinct addition to the series.

Not Too Formal

The rest room of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Seattle, has an atmosphere of a handsome drawing room, tastefully and harmoniously furnished, but not too formal for service.

French blues and grays predominate in the color scheme. Directly in the center of the long room have been placed two overstuffed davenports upholstered in brocaded blue velvet. These back on a mahogany davenport table containing a handsome ornamental lamp. Several upholstered chairs in rose and blue tapestry tones furnish one corner of the room, with a huge mahogany clock and two small mirrors at either side, flanked by bracket lamps with parchment shades.

Desks and wall tables are of mahogany, while along the side wall opposite the mirrors is a long built-in seat with tapestry cushions.

Wall mirrors hung above the tables enhance the beauty of growing plants or bowls of flowers on the tables. A black and blue theatre carpet, heavily padded, covers the floor.

Canary birds in brass cages hang at either side of the rounded windows; between them stands a pedestal containing a basket of flowers. Windows have valances and drapes of tapestry and soft gray silk curtains underneath.

Walls are of a soft tan, shading into a lighter ceiling separated by a stencilled border. Floral effects, centered in all wall spaces just below this border, complete a tasteful effect.

Crandall Installs Storage Batteries As Auxiliary Lighting Precaution

THE Crandall Amusement Company has provided an auxiliary lighting system for each of its theatres in the residential section of Washington as a precaution against loss of lighting following failure of commercial power plants to supply current.

On a number of occasions during the past year or so accidents at the power plant have compelled the local theatres to close for hours at a time, causing a large financial loss and also creating a great deal of confusion due to the inability of patrons to find their way around the house.

A regulation in the District of Columbia prohibits the installation of gas fixtures in any theatre. The exhibitors are, of course, compelled to rely on the commercial current.

The Crandall electricians have just completed the installation of eight-volt batteries in each of the four outlying houses, equipping the latter with lamps of 15 and 32 candle power. These batteries are of the low specific gravity type and have a capacity of 210 ampere hours. The batteries will be put into use about two hours each week to keep them in good shape and will be recharged every other month.

It is estimated that the recharging will cost from $2 to $5, according to the amount of current they will absorb. The heaviest pull will be at the Savoy Theatre, where the lamps aggregate 200 candle power. At the Avenue Grand the capacity is 175 candle power, at the Apollo 160 candle power and at the York 100 candle power. The electricians found it necessary to substitute regular electrical fittings for the ordinary automobile fittings which are intended to go with batteries and equipment of this type.

The wiring was in accordance with the requirements of the District of Columbia regulations. The batteries and equipment were furnished by the Washington Theatre Supply Company and are of the Government type, furnished in large quantities during the war for use at the camps and cantonments.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

The week ending April 14, in so far as motion picture companies incorporating in New York State, failed to measure up to other weeks thus far this year.

There were but nine companies incorporated and these represented a comparatively small sum in the way of capitalization, the total being but $386,000.

The following gives the names of the companies, location of principal office, capitalization and the directors selected for the first year:

Standard Attractions, Inc., $1,000, Hyman Emerson, Abraham J. Eder, B. H. Berman, New York. Cosmopolitan Playhouse, Inc., $10,000. L. I. Fink, M. L. Elkin, Etta London, New York. Border Amusement Company, Buffalo, $150,000, Charles Long, Tonawanda; R. J. Krotz and J. T. Gilbert, Buffalo. Simrud Amusement Corporation, $5,000, Louis Kahn, D. S. Simons, Max Rudnick, New York. Louis F. Werba Corporation, $45,000, Louis F. Werba, Edward S. Golding, Harry Bryant, New York. Blyler Enterprises, Inc., $5,000, James and Jane Blyler, Belle Greene, New York. Arthur West Theatrical Enterprises, $60,000, William G. Lovatt, Sylvia Schwartzman, Arthur West, New York. John E. Coutts Tabloid Circuit, $10,000, J. E. Coutts, J. Girsdansky, New York; Nathan Vingrad, Newburgh. Terminal Auditorium Corporation, $100,000, Edward J. Wheadon, B. Levy, Samuel Heller, New York.

Giving Hold-up Men a Nice Warm Welcome

When a needy panhandler, too proud to work, sticks his countenance in front of the cashier's window and modestly requests the contents of the cash drawer, don't scream, don't faint. Just say pleasantly, "Certainly. Here it is," and bring out a handful of gun instead of the expected mazuma.

The automatic dispenser of hold-up preventive advertised by the Atlantic Import Company, of Newark, N. J., is small enough to fit into the cash drawer or a ladies palm, but it carries seven 25-calibre Colt automatic cartridges that will make a hold-up artist feel like a disused sieve or an amateur lead mine.

And it gets into action with a sudden quickness that is most disconcerting to an unofficial revenue collector.

It constitutes an exceedingly useful and inexpensive addition to box office equipment and promotes a sense of security in the ticket taker out of all proportion to its cost. As an automatic changemaker, it is a wonder. It will change the facial expression of the average tough in considerably less time and more permanently than our best massage parlors.
